Behind the Scenes at Newport.

Fads and Fancies of the Season at Society's Summer Capital, By the Rev. C. W. De Lyon Nichols, Author of the Ultra-Fashionable Peerage of America and Disciple of Ward McAllister.

No two places have more depraved ideas about female beauty than Newport and New York City. By depraved I mean distorted and perverted when tested in the crucible of classic ideals.

Knickerbockers and the ultra-smart are alike chargeable for this anomaly.

In Newport, beauty is monetized: I do not mean sold for a price on the street. But female beauty at Newport is too often made to consist of a woman's having a multi-millionaire bank account, of being chic and a walking fashion plate.

As for New York City, we started wrong, with such a strong infusion of coarse Holland Dutch market gardening corpuscles in the blood of established society.

Comparisons always make people love one another.

Then, place a row of New York Holland dames and damsels, vaunted by their families and clans for their good looks, alongside beautiful New York and Newport women of clear-cut patrician English lineage, such as Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Mrs. William Payne Thompson, Mrs. Charles Dana Gibson, Mrs. Lee Tailer, Miss Blight, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger, Miss Violet Cruger, Mrs. Clarence H. Mackay, Mrs. Oscar Livingston, Miss Edith Colford, Miss Barclay, Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. Henry Siegel, Miss Georgine Wilde, Mrs. Henry Clews, Jr., Mrs. James Brown Potter (nee Handy), Miss Natica Rives, Mrs. William E. Carter and Mrs. James Francis Sullivan, of Philadelphia, and Anglo-Saxon supremacy asserts itself every time. Mrs. Oscar Livingston, Mrs. Benjamin C. Porter, Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Clarence Mackay, Mrs. Lorillard Spencer and Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger can, in addition, plume themselves on having what court circles of the highest fashions the world over would recognize as distinctively patrician faces.

In any provincial city of the great republic or New England town, certain people are professed to bear the hall marks of what is descanted upon by the local oracles as the "aristocratic face." Mal-nutrition—or, to coin a Newport-New York phrase—the Gerry digestion, or a liability to heart failure, or phthisis, all tend to accentuate certain lines and produce a certain wanness and blase expression which go to make up the New England "aristocratic face."

By a process of elimination of the accidental qualities of the groups of human lineaments portrayed down in the Rogues' Gallery at the Central Office, the typical criminal face has been abstracted.

Now, pressing into service this same method on which Zeuxis, the noted painter of Heraclea, first got out a patent right, what is the American aristocratic face par excellence of to-day?

The Aristocratic American Face.

Conceding the question is somewhat of a paradox, in the teeth of the prejudices of the majority of my fellow men, I make bold to assert that the American aristocratic face par excellence of to-day is the ultra-smart face, not a distinctive cast of features, but the type of expression which prevails among the social elect at Newport.

The people who possess the manners of power in any era, whether fashion reigns as it does in this country or not, are the ruling class.

People's faces insensibly express the degree of social deference to which they are accustomed and it is patent to almost a stupid observer.

The ultra-smart set is the national social trust, the American regency of fashion its nobility, and its members are accorded that homage in every large city in the United States and abroad.

Amid the rival fads and fancies of the Newport season, in common with the London season, the dancing man in society is going more out of fashion each year.

High-class society men, both in London and at Newport, are caring less for dancing.

A goodly number of sons of peers of the realm in Great Britain do not know how to dance at all.

To say nothing to militate against the elegant accomplishment of dancing, which forms a sine qua non of fashionable education, the money men are those the more in request by the women of the smart set than the overgraceful and winged Mercuries.

If a man l[illegible]ing to command the will and affections of a handsome, m[illegible]courted and fickle ultra-smart woman, he has got to be [illegible]essed of what the French philosopher Helvetius terme[illegible]nal attraction."

The lack o[illegible]ity points the moral of a somewhat famous divorce suit now on the docket between two members of the ultra-smart set.

There are bachelors who entertain at Newport, whom everybody applauds as "nice fellows," with troops of women friends, but in whose presence, or at the clasp of whose hand, the feminine pulse does not quicken one iota.

Such had better take warning and marry out of the set, or, at least, become the consort of a woman who desperately needs a home and a man who has no habits, or as a village woman once put it, a man who didn't get drunk or belong to a church choir.

This lack of "passional attraction" was the root and the branch of the most notorious divorce, on the statutory grounds, of quite recent years, which has even split Newport society, and of which the effects are still felt, although much less palpably than a year or two ago.

While half of the outside feminine world with longing eyes regards Newport as the Elysian Fields and its cottages as the homes of the blest, there are humiliating facts to be faced every once in a while, both by the social aspirant and the accepted habitue of the place, who chances, for various reasons, to be on the down grade socially.

Such a hostess is put in the position, when planning an entertainment, that she is obliged to own up to herself that she is not worth the meeting.

And as it will be an affront to the guest of honor if those of her friends bidden do not grace your home with their presence, there you are with a number of smart people meshed in the toils of a very effectual form of polite coercion.

A debutante or lately betrothed young girl is the most suitable and unsuspecting guest of honor to subserve such an end.

Mrs. William G. Roelker's series of dinners at Newport last season widely and long in advance advertised in honor of a Duke, who did not leave Lenox, however, worked well, especially as His Grace was a high churchman of a degree of severity uncommon even among Anglican ecclesiastics, and his would-be hostess a remarried divorcee.

Mrs. Roelker's star is in the ascendant again this season, with Elisha Dyer to lead her cotillion, and her rapid headway into the smart set proves what being born a Coudert beauty, advertisement, good dressing, social enterprise, coupled with being married to a man who is not a social drawback with an ignoble name, can do in the path of advancement.

Another family of Newport cottagers from Providence, with millions more of money than the Roelkers, but as ill adapted to Newport conditions as ponderous Mexican coaches are to our Northern roads, have essayed in vain for years to do what the Roelkers have accomplished in one season.

This family of long suffering aspirants, who have never been received by the Astors and Vanderbilts, have come early and stayed late, have subscribed to every charity in juxtaposition to smartness, have given innumerable dinners and luncheons—the lists of guests usually for ambitious reasons being kept out of the newspapers, and whenever in the lapse of years an invitation to a church wedding to which three thousand cards have been sent out has come their way, they have sent a wedding gift worth a king's ransom.

And the general public, which is hot-headed, upon reading of their extravagant wedding present in the newspapers, jumps to the conclusion that the donor was, of course, bidden to the reception and that the sumptuous gift is the earnest and pledge of intimate friendship.

One of the after candle-light amenities, or rather immunities, of the Newport season is the fact that, quite the reverse of the flight of gallants at other watering places, an ardent lover at Newport is never caught with dabs and patches of rouge on the shoulder or sleeve of his ballroom or dinner coat.

"A VERY EFFECTIVE FORM OF POLITE COERCION."

"People's faces insensibly express the degree of social deference to which they are accustomed."

The reason of this exemption is because the up-to-date Newport mondaine uses a liquid beautifier for her complexion, which is impervious both to osculation and strenuous sea bathing.

No class of women lives up so successfully to the maxim that the province of art is to conceal art as the fair denizens of the city by the sea.

Among those ultra-smart personages, on the other hand, who disclaim all this sort of aesthetic legerdemain and let nature be her own beautifier may be cited Mrs. Rhinelander Stewart, Mrs. William G. Roelker, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish, Mrs. Oliver Belmont, Mrs. Ogden Mills, Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger, Mrs. Townsend Burden, Miss Evelyn Burden, Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. Philip M. Lydig, Mrs. William B. Leeds and Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell.

The native New England girl, disdaining the rouge pots of her more fascinating and feminine Southern sisters and remaining in crass ignorance of the alembics of the Newport belle's liquid beautifier, generally prefers to go about looking anemic.

A few choice and exceptional spirits, however, in secret buy up cheap artificial roses from the village milliner and by means of the violent attrition of the petals which are surcharged with poisons, blooming complexions speedily ensue Paradise and the Peri fashion.

A delectable and highly commendable fad of this Newport season, in common with the custom of the London season, is the giving of entertainments and garden parties for charity.

Besides the intrinsic good that is done, although the old-time Newporter of Thames and Truro streets turns black in his face at the imputation that his native heath stands in need of a turberculosis camp, it also serves to relieve the ostentatious life of the Summer colony from a suspicion of vulgarity.

With the younger Vanderbilts at Newport, in whom the affective faculties predominate over the reflective, old fashioned friendships are a prevalent fad. The question which a young Vanderbilt raises in his mind, unlike the majority of the Newport social trust, is not, "Is he smart, or is he wealthy?" but "Do I like him?" or "Is he an old friend?"

In consequence, people have all along of late been coming to the front who would never have been heard of in the realm of fashion had it not been for the somewhat indiscriminate helping hand of one of the younger Vanderbilts, whose minds are not put together like box turtles, and are certainly not the width of parlor matches.

Of the wives of the younger Vanderbilts, Mrs. Cornelius, Jr., is almost the only one who has a definite line of ultra-smart social policy, and she is consequently the only one of the Vanderbilt clan fitted to be a social leader.

"Don't call me a fad, I beg of you; a fad is so short lived, more so at Newport than any place else," a singer whose voice has been one of the delights of the Newport season, deprecated with a nervous quaver—a tear in his voice.

As a warning or a shining example of success, according to one's taste or relations with the principal, I subjoin the memoirs of a Newport Fad.

A woman whose daughter is one of the pronounced and almost too lively belles of the cottage colony, came to me.

"In the name of goodness, can't you do something—get a church position or some engagements to sing at cottages, for a young Englishman, a singer with a glorious voice, who came over from the other side with that light opera, Miss Highty-Tighty, and is a protege of mine? He is a younger son and has served as a soldier down in India. The women are simply daft over him. He belongs to a family of earls, but insists upon using his stage name in society and everywhere else. How adorable his modesty on this point! I say again, he is peculiarly sensitive—has a great deal of family pride—about his titled connections being divulged in public print as if he were trading on the family name. So I beg of you don't breathe a word about it. There he comes now."

The Fad strode into the horseshoe, athletic, English to his fingertips, handsome and arrayed in white corduroy from head to foot, and with a majestic gait, which when applied to Queen Dido, Virgil denominated a Spatiatur.

The multi-millionaire Newport beaux were dwarfed to pigmies and felt their inferiority. The women had no eyes for them, but were all agog to know who the distinguished stranger might be.

The Fad's singing voice, not a whit above mediocrity and with a method, or rather lack of method, which was somewhat "throaty," was made up of the following basal elements: one-quarter personal magnetism and superb physique, one-quarter a plausibility of speech, which could prove ecru yellow; one-quarter the showiest type of stage drawing-room manners, and one-quarter—voice.

The Fad's signal success in winning Newport society's cheques with his little stock of ballads and light opera excepts was followed up by Lenox triumphs, the great Mrs. Astor, who was on a visit there, finally taking him up—her only excursion into Bohemia on this side of the water.

Immediately after the opening of the society season in town the Fad gave a private social entertainment of his own, an invitation musicale, to just fifty people, in an artist's studio, the whole being copied in every detail after one of Whistler's famous ten o'clocks in London.

A couple of artists from the grand opera, besides the Chevalier Roosevelt-Scovel donated their services and the supper was provided in toto by two well-known women in society, one of them my previous interlocutor in his behalf at Newport. Mr. Creighton Webb kindly acted that evening as the Fad's social aide-de-camp.

Promptly at 11 o'clock I saw Mrs. Astor and Mrs. Orme Wilson emerge with the other guests from the little old-fashioned lift, and five minutes later one of the women of the Vanderbilt family fell in a dead faint and was lying on the floor in an ante-room covered with priceless gems.

The next Summer the smart set of Newport discerned through their lorgnettes the Fad standing behind the counter of a wee bit of a booth over at Narragansett Pier selling antiques. The Fad, with true British independence and social tact, abjured the smart set as visiting acquaintances, but they stuck to him as customers and to-day he is building up a fortune not far from Fifth avenue.

How valuable, then, an introduction through the medium of that supreme trysting place of fads and fancies—the City by the Sea.

M. Witte's Impressions of America.

"AMERICAN WOMEN are handsome and independent and clever, and they all seem very happy. I admire them very much. NEW YORK is a wonder, a marvel! The harbor, with its great buildings looming up on shore and its great ships, was most remarkable to me. The great buildings are amazing. The order and cleanliness of the great city also seemed most wonderful. BOSTON is much more like European cities than New York. I have seen many cities much like Boston, but have never anywhere met the originality of New York. I was greatly pleased with my visit to Cambridge."

"M. Witte's face grew grave. His deep voice grew deeper. He talked slowly and with more emphasis.

By Eleanor Ames.

Hotel Wentworth, New Castle, N. H., Aug. 25.

LEAVING the apartments of Count Sergius M. Witte, senior Russian envoy to the Peace Conference, after obtaining the first interview granted by him to any American newspaper woman, I carried with me the impression of a kindly smile, a gravely courteous manner and tremendous power, both physical and mental.

M. Witte is not an easy man for the interviewer to reach. His time is very much occupied and he is burdened with cares.

The ear of M. Witte must be reached through his secretary, M. Korostowetz. To reach M. Korostowetz one must watch and wait. M. Korostowetz is a busy man. He goes to the Navy Yard at 9 o'clock in the morning with M. Witte. He returns with him at 6 o'clock at night.

The moment he appears he is encircled and obscured by eager press representatives, listening with strained ears for news of the conference, asking in confusion an avalanche of questions.

It was so as I sat and watched and waited.

Then suddenly M. Korostowetz bowed himself through the lines, darted across the corridor, through the ballroom and emerged on the deserted piazza which overlooks the tennis courts.

He paused and squared his shoulders and threw back his head, as though to breathe one free and full breath away from ease and confusion.

It was the moment for which I had waited a weary, long day through.

"M. Korostowetz," I began.

"Madame," he bowed.

"I am a newspaper woman," I informed him. "The Hearst newspapers have commissioned me to get an interview with M. Witte. Could you make an appointment for me?"

"M. Witte is a busy man. I do not know that it will be possible for him to receive any press representative. But if you will give me your card it will please me to present your request to him and deliver to you his reply." He bowed again.

Then he turned back.

"Do you speak French?" he asked.

I regretted that I did not.

He looked serious.

"M. Witte speaks no English," he announced.

"But," I suggested, "you speak English perfectly. Wouldn't you be willing to interpret for me?"

"I shall be honored," he declared.

And still I waited and hoped. I recalled the many and varied anecdotes I had heard about M. Witte.

Presently, with quick, nervous tread, M. Korostowetz came down the broad stairway. In his hand he held my card. He paused before me.

"M. Witte will see you at once," he said.

The words erased all the tiresomeness of waiting, all the worry and anxiety and fear, above which hope had struggled to remain dominant.

He led the way, walking with the quick, nervous steps so characteristic of him, and I followed, up the stairway, down the hall, up three steps, down four, around a corner, down two more steps, into that wing of the annex given over to the accommodation of the Russian members of the conference.

Just before we reached the door of M. Witte's apartment M. Korostowetz said impressively:

"I believe you do not desire to talk about matters connected with the conference."

It was a warning which could not be ignored, so I murmured a concession to the request, and he knocked on the door, behind which M. Witte awaited me.

A deep voice bade us enter.

It was a fairly large room into which I stepped, and later, when I looked about me, I counted a leather couch, a desk, a writing table and four chairs.

At the time I only saw M. Witte.

He seemed to fill the room. Standing in the centre, under the chandelier, was his tall, broad-shouldered, bulky figure, above which his massive head and kindly face bent toward me as he extended his hand in silent greeting, and then, with sweeping gesture, motioned me to a seat, while he seated himself in a generous armchair near his desk and opposite me.

For a moment I looked at him, and then we both smiled. It was a friendly smile of greeting.

It said "I am glad to see you" on his part.

On mine it meant "I am deeply gratified to you for your goodness in seeing me."

It let me see that M. Witte had deep blue eyes, set under heavy, gray eyebrows; that there are fewer lines in his face than his pictures would have you believe; that his cheeks are colored ruddy with the good, red blood of health; that his gray beard and hair, which, thin in front, is worn combed back, a bit aggressively perhaps, have an under tinge of that shade of reddish brown designated as sandy.

M. Witte was dressed in some dark suit, and his coat, though buttoned, enveloped him loosely as he sat leaning back in his chair, his legs crossed, his hands folded before him.

"M. Witte stretched his great arms wide and opened his eyes with wonder to convey to me the effect New York had upon him."

He spoke to M. Korostowetz, using his mother tongue—the rich, rolling, picturesque Russian.

M. Korostowetz interpreted. "His Excellency regrets deeply his inability to speak English," he said.

I smiled and nodded.

"Tell him I'm just as sorry that I can't speak French or Russian."

Then we smiled at each other once more and motioned simultaneously to M. Korostowetz.

The interview was entirely in Russian. The only words I understood were "Americansky," which was used in every sentence; "New York" and "Boston," the names of President Roosevelt and the Czar.

"His Excellency is delighted with your country," said M. Korostowetz, translating a long response on the part of M. Witte to my question of how America and Americans impress him.

"He bids me say that he is enjoying his stay most heartily. He is very greatly impressed with the American simplicity, the apparent equality, the frankness and good will shown.

"He admires much the fearlessness and energy of the American people. He considers them very wonderful. Especially does he marvel at their great accomplishments along every line."

"And American women?"

M. Witte smiled and spread his hands in an expression of admiration. He talked with animation.

"His Excellency, since coming to America, has met comparatively few American women," translated M. Korostowetz; "but those whom he has had the great pleasure of meeting impress him most favorably. They are very handsome and independent and clever, he says, and they all seem very happy. He does not find them so very different, as he sees them, from the Russian women."

It remained, however, for the mention of "little old New York" to send M. Witte into rhapsodies.

"New York was a wonder, a marvel, to His Excellency," declared Korostowetz, evidently sharing Witte's enthusiasm. enthusiasm.

"He cannot really express the excellent impression it made upon him.

"Never has he seen any city at all like it. The harbor, with its great buildings looming up on shore, and all its great ships, was most remarkable to him.

"Most wonderful did the order and cleanliness of the city seem to him.

"He cannot understand how it is possible for so big a city to be kept so clean. It is much cleaner than any Russian city.

"Then, the great buildings amazed him.

"His visit to the Bourse—the Exchange—was of much interest and wonder to him. He considers it amazing how much business is done in a short time in that great city."

M. Witte stretched his great arms wide and opened his eyes with wonder, to convey to me the effect New York had upon him. Boston, while it interested, did not amaze him.

"Boston is much more like European cities," said M. Korostowetz. "He has seen many cities much like Boston, but he has never anywhere met the originality of New York.

"In Boston the element of the university at Cambridge pleased him greatly."

"Ask him what he thinks of President Roosevelt," I requested patient M. Korostowetz.

M. Witte nodded approvingly as he talked.

"He thinks President Roosevelt a very remarkable man. He thinks he is a strong man and most individual. He considers him one of the most extraordinary men he has ever met. He admires his democracy."

"And the Czar? I mean the Czar as a ruler and as a man."

M. Korostowetz put the question gravely.

M. Witte's face grew grave. His deep voice grew deeper. He talked more slowly and with more emphasis.

He and M. Korostowetz had quite a bit of conversation before the reply was translated.

They both shrugged their shoulders and gesticulated.

Then M. Korostowetz turned toward me, smiling suavely.

"His Excellency is sure," he began, "that you will see how difficult it is for him to express any views on that subject.

"Should he speak in the most laudatory terms, then it would be said that he was trying to please.

"If it were possible for him to say anything which was not laudatory, then every one would call him a villain.

"His Excellency is sure that you will appreciate his position and will pardon his not committing any opinions on the subject."

I turned to the subject of visits to Newport and the mingling with American society, in which, I declared, M. Witte is considered the lion of the hour.

M. Witte smiled.

M. Korostowetz translated.

"So far His Excellency has not seen much of American society. He has had no chance, for he has been so very busy. His only opportunity has been the dinner given by Captain Winslow, of the Mayflower. He enjoyed that very much. It gave him a delightful impression of American hospitality, which he considers a most noteworthy feature of your people."

A message was brought to M. Witte.

I knew that below a delegation of five of the richest, most prominent and influential Hebrews in all America had gathered to talk over with him the condition of the Jews in Russia.

The interview was at an end. Profoundly he begged M. Korostowetz to regret that was so. Slowly he arose from his chair, rising tall, ponderous, yet active, powerful as a giant beofre me. He grasped my hand in his big, firm palm in a hearty clasp. He bowed his head with grave courtesy.

No, he did not kiss me. Whatever M. Witte may have given the railroad conductor in the way of salutation, for me there was only a handclasp and a bow, and a few words in the fascinating, mellow Russian, which, translated, said:

"I am pleased to have met you, and regret my time is so occupied. American women are very wonderful. I hope in time to learn your language."

As I reached the door I glanced back.

A bow, a sweeping gesture of the hand, and the door closed.

"A wonderful man," I said to M. Korostowetz.

"Most remarkable," he agreed. "You must have impressed him. He has seldom before given so long a time or said so much to a representative of the press."

It is not a matter of wonderment after having met Count Sergius Witte, or, to be correct, M. Selge de Witte, that he has risen from a peasant boy to be the power in Russia that he is to-day.

His energy, his determination, his compelling strength, with his simplicity of looking at facts, make for a character which could never be held in bondage; which must, at any cost, become dominant.

To begin with, he has always been a man who has stood for Russia's greatest good. He has shown from his youth the level head which meets a crisis calmly and thinks out a reasonable and wise course.

Born a peasant, success has not robbed him of his democracy, and the strong blood of the common people which flows in his veins has never become devitalized.

Steadily, by honest ability, by hearty effort, he has forced his way up from farm to railroad employe, and then, still advancing, he was finally made Minister of Finance for Russia.

He has always proved himself capable of meeting every emergency.

Long ago, when a station agent in the government railroad employ, he averted a catastrophe by taking affairs into his own hands and moving military troops as he knew they should be moved, in spite of official orders, which were such as to have resulted in stalling the entire arrangements. For a moment Siberia stared him in the face; then the value of his act became apparent, and honor displaced the threatened censure.

Again, he came to the front in straightening out a financial tangle for Russia, and the splendid credit system of his country is the result. Age has added experience and power.

M. Witte is at the height of his capabilities.

It seems to me that here in America, when Russia faces another problem, the tremendous strength and clear brain of Count Sergius Witte is going to gain its greatest triumph.

ELEANOR AMES.

"M. Witte smiled and spread his hands in an expression of admiration. He talked with animation."

BAREFOOTED AND ALMOST STARVED TO DEATH

THE richest man in the world hobbling about in his bare feet! John D. Rockefeller, with four hundred millions at his command, compelled to leave his bed at sunrise and wade bare-footed in the wet grass, clad only in a bath robe! This is the extraordinary spectacle which telegraph and cable have flashed all over the world. It is one of those strange true stories to which a moral inevitably attaches, and all the world agrees on the moral pointed by Mr. Rockefeller's predicament.

Somewhere in the Bible there is a text to the effect that if a man gives up his whole mind and time -- the acquiring of vast riches he will sacrifice that which no wealth can buy—his digestion. Mr. Rockefeller has been charged over and over again with having gained his immense fortune with a ruthless disregard for the fate of all competitors. Well, for several years past it has been known that his stomach was so weak that it would hardly digest enough food to keep him alive.

At length starvation has approached so close that he has been driven to the last resort of persons in his predicament—to the Kneipp cure. This means that, old as he is, and rich, he may not take his ease as old men love to do, going to bed early and sleeping late. Weak and ill-nourished as he is, he must rise early and walk about his lawn and fields barefooted while the dew is on the grass.

No Stomach, and Yet Hungry.

Aged, barefooted Rockefeller, hungry as a day laborer, dare not break his fast of the night until he has waded, shivering and unhappy, in the wet grass; and, even then, he is not sure that the soft food designed for infants, which is about all he dare take into his torpid stomach, will not lie there undigested to add other pains to those of hunger.

Never before have John D. Rockefeller's wonderful powers of endurance been so cruelly drawn upon. As his physical sufferings have increased, owing to the inability of his digestive organs to assimilate sufficient nourishment to maintain the strength of his large frame, more severe and faster have fallen upon him the criticisms of his fellow men. Now, as he wades in the dew-laden grass, at dawn, barefooted and miserable, it seems as though every man's finger was pointing at him in unpitying accusation.

Mr. Rockefeller's stomach did not forsake him all at once. Ten years ago he began to take treatment for "dyspepsia." But he went right on piling up his millions in his characteristic fashion, and the trouble grew steadily worse. The doctors were handicapped in one way; as Mr. Rockefeller had never used tobacco or alcoholic liquors, all they could deprive him of were tea, coffee, and pie.

As he grew worse and suffered great agony from his stomach, so that it was possible for him to take solid food only in the smallest quantities, the doctors decided that the pneumogastric nerve, which governs all the processes of the digestive tract, had lost its power. This great nerve was partly paralysed, owing to the long and undue strain that had been placed on the brain and other nerves.

A Miserable and Desperate Condition.

In such a case solid foods cannot be dissolved. They remain in the stomach to putrify, produce gases and poison the system. The multi-millionaire, head of the greatest business organization in the world, who had not learned how to rest, fell into a miserable and desperate condition. He was literally starving to death, the clam broth and beef teas allowed him being inadequate to keep up his strength.

John D. Rockefeller is a most determined man. When, as a result of a consultation of his physicians, he was advised to put on overalls and go into the fields and work like a day laborer he did not hesitate a moment. He was then living at his splendid country place in the Pocantico Hills, near Tarrytown, N. Y. The grounds contained more than a thousand acres, with landscape gardening in progress on an immense scale. Mr. Rockefeller rose at 6 o'clock in the morning and went out with his workmen. He dug, sawed wood, plied the shovel and hoe, blasted rock and did all kinds of rough work.

The hard work and starvation plan was followed again the next Summer with good results. In the third season he reached a point where he could eat a small piece of meat once a day without suffering.

No Hair on Head or Face.

Four years ago, however, a new trouble attacked him. His hair came out in patches. Then his mustache grew thin and finally came out altogether. The disease progressed until he had not a single hair on his head or face.

The disease which attacked his hair was undoubtedly "alopecia areata," or "area baldness," which in rare cases involves the entire head. Its chief causes are nervousness and malnutrition. Dr. George T. Jackson, the chief instructor in dermatology at the College of Physicians and Surgeons and the leading hair specialist of New York, says of this disease:

"The disease usually begins suddenly, the patient finding to his surprise a bald circular spot upon the head without knowing when it formed. In a number of cases there will be a history of severe, often periodic, and localised headache preceding the hair fall for weeks or months. In other cases some slight pruritus, burning, or pain may antedate the alopecia. In any event, the patch forms suddenly, the hair falling out at once.

But now another chapter begins which shows Mr. Rockefeller's case to have still the elements of tragedy in it. Not long ago, for the first time, he was quoted as being concerned over the criticisms of himself and his business methods.

"Is it possible," he said, "that I am the kind of man they make me out to be?"

Then it was reported that Mrs. Rockefeller was depressed and suffering because of Miss Tarbell's drastic arraignment of her husband in magazine articles. Suddenly the world was electrified by the news that Mr. Rockefeller had made the greatest cash donation in history—$30,000,000 more to the Chicago University.

Depressed by Criticism.

Did the money nabob at last see the error of his way? Was he trying to stem the tide of vituperation? Was he preparing to give back to the public all he had taken from individuals? And now comes the really pathetic spectacle of the world's richest man going about barefooted at sunrise in a last desperate effort to spur his stomach into digesting enough food to keep life in his body.

All sorts of people have taken the "Kneipp cure." Ten years ago, at the time Father Kneipp was advertised to visit this country it became a fad among fashionable young people, especially young women, to walk barefooted in the wet grass of the early morning. Parties of them were to be seen strolling over the dew-wet meadows of Central Park, New York, with their skirts tucked up above white ankles. It was great sport, and probably did them good.

That part of the cure which prescribes walking barefooted in the wet grass claims Mr. Rockefeller's chief attention at present. Before the servants are up, clad in a bathrobe beneath which his bare feet are revealed, the aged millionaire steals softly down the stairs and out through the kitchen door onto the spacious lawn. He does not invite notice. If the milkman is on his rounds Mr. Rockefeller withdraws prudently among the shrubberies. From the gaze of the early-rising multitude he is shielded by the granite walls which surround the grounds of his Forest Hill home.

It has been half a century since Mr. Rockefeller last made a practice of going barefooted. Then the soles of his feet were like leather. Now they are so tender that he hobbles along, stepping gingerly where there is rough stubble, appearing anything but comfortable while on this new quest for health.

How They Will Wrap Mr. Rockefeller in a Cold Wet Sheet to Improve His Digestion and Invigorate Him Generally.

The Kneipp system of cold water baths prohibits rubbing or drying the body after bathing. There are baths and douches for various parts of the body for various ills. Following them the body is draped in a sheet or other garment, or the patient is put to bed with his skin still wet. Wet compresses are also much used. The best results are promised in the following cases:

All chronic stomach troubles.

It is not yet known whether Mr. Rockefeller has gone further than the barefoot dew treatment—but this is especially recommended for stomach troubles, and for reducing the temperature of the brain, both symptoms in the millionaire's case.

FLOP! WENT THE EARTH AND THE TROPICS FROZE UP.

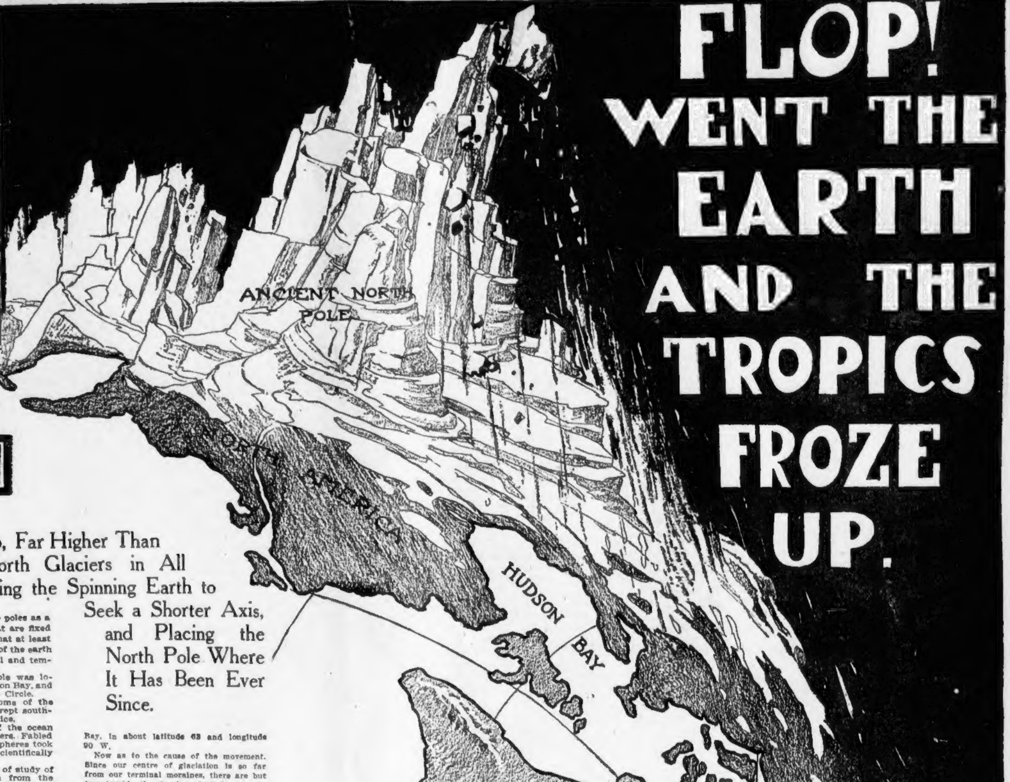

Illustration of the Stratification of Glacial Ice.

How the Great Prehistoric Ice Cap, Far Higher Than Any Mountain, Thrust Forth Glaciers in All Directions, Finally Forcing the Spinning Earth to Seek a Shorter Axis, and Placing the North Pole Where It Has Been Ever Since.

WE are accustomed to think of the equator and the poles as a circle and as points on the earth's surface that are fixed and unchangeable. Yet science has revealed that at least once since this planet bcame habitable the axis of the earth was suddenly so far displaced as to transpose the tropical and temperate zones.

Before this great cataclysm took place the North Pole was located where what is now the northwestern margin of Hudson Bay, and the present latitude of New York was near the old Arctic Circle.

Siberia was a semi-tropical country, the original home of the mammoth, which became extinct when the polar region swept southward to preserve the last of his species in mountains of ice.

When the new equator was established the waters of the ocean rushed thither, covering up continents and creating others. Fabled Atlantis disappeared and the Eastern and Western hemispheres took their present form. Perhaps the Noachian deluge is thus scientifically accounted for.

These are interesting facts deduced from generations of study of the marks left by the great glacier which swept down from the North until its edges disappeared in the ocean and in the soil of what are now the New England and Middle and Western States.

By these marks in primeval rock and by the boulders which the glacier strewed wherever it flowed, geologists have traced the great ice stream to its source and demonstrated that there must have been the ancient North Pole.

As this region happened to be level land, far then from any ocean shore, it was possible for the polar ice cap to grow and grow until it was higher than any mountain—until its height so lengthened the earth's axis that, according to a well-known law of physics, a shorter axis took its place, its northern pole being at the edge of the ice cap.

For the first time these interesting scientific facts have been set forth in a popular way in a paper by Lucius E. Knowles, the distinguished geologist, which is printed in full on this page.

THE phenomena connected with the examination of evidences of glaciation in the higher latitudes of the North American Continent have proved so puzzling to scientists, and have given rise to so many diverse theories as to its origin, cause and effect, that it would seem that any theory which should, in a measure, correlate these phenomena, and to a certain extent bring harmony out of the chaos of ideas, should be welcomed by all students of those evidences. To produce such correlative harmony is the purpose of this paper.

The chief reliance for a knowledge of the nature and direction of those ice movements is on the striations or grooves cut in the soft limestone rock by the hard boulders of granite and other igneous rocks which the glaciers tore from their present ledges in higher altitudes and bore along in their lower surfaces, and which acted as a gigantic rasp upon the ledges of comparatively soft rocks over which they passed. These striae, where they have been examined, indicate two general facts:

First—That the ice—probably on account of the conformation of the surface—was pushed forward in several tongues or lobes, forming as many distinct loops; among the principal of which may be named the Green Bay, the Lake Michigan, the Lake Superior, the Saginaw Bay, the Lake Erie, with many minor loops.

How the Ice-Stream Moved.

Second—That the ice in these several loops had a composite motion—a forward motion, caused by the pressure from behind, and a lateral motion, caused by the widening of the lobe. This composite motion resulted in striae curving outward from the main axis of the lobe, and from which the direction of the main axis can be determined. The extent of the general forward movement is shown by the terminal "moraines," or gravel ridges, which were pushed up ahead of the ice tongue, while the lateral margins of the different lobes are marked by the interlobate moraines which were pushed up between the lateral edges of two adjacent loops, by their widening. The largest and best defined of these interlobate moraines is that between the Lake Michigan and Green Bay loops, extending from the entrance of Green Bay southward to near the south line of Wisconsin, something over a hundred miles, and known as the "Kettle Range," or "Potash Kettles."

Now, in the consideration of the direction of this great ice movement we find that the main axes of these several loops have a general convergence toward a point in Canada which we may name "The Centre of Glaciation." But to determine this point more definitely we must have recourse to the general trend of the terminal moraines, which may be described as follows:

Beginning at Cape Cod, in latitude 42, longitude 70, we find it extending in a slight curve through the States of Connecticut, New York, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, and being continuous with the great Missouri "Coteau," which seems to be an extension of it into the Dominion of Canada. Considering this curve as the arc of a circle, and erecting polar co-ordinates on its semi-chords, we establish this centre of glaciation at a point near the northern extremity of Hudson Bay, in about latitude 63 and longitude 90 W.

Now as to the cause of the movement. Since our centre of glaciation is so far from our terminal moraines, there are but two tenable theories by which it may be accounted for. Either there must have been a tremendous accumulation of snow and ice in this centre or the land of that locality must have been at an elevation above sea level far greater than that of the highest mountains now known. This second supposition, however, is hardly in the range of possibilities, since an upheaval of such an extent, at a date so recent as the conceded period of this glaciation, must have been accompanied by violent and extensive disturbances of the rock strata, of which there is not the slightest evidence. On the contrary, the region under consideration is one of the most ancient of land surfaces, and could not in the nature of things, have been the scene of violent elevations and subsidences. Hence, we are thrown back upon the other horn of the dilemma for a solution—the accumulation of a vast depth of snow and ice at the centre.

Why the Earth's Axis Changed.

What, then, caused this accumulation? Evidently but one thing could have caused it—this point must have been the ancient pole of the earth, and was probably so far from the open sea that only the now northeastern edge of the old icecap was exposed to the ocean currents. But to find a cause for this change of axis, and consequent removal of the pole to its present position, we must consider a well known law of physics: "A mass of matter in revolution will always seek the shortest axis upon which to revolve."

Torell, a Swedish geologist, tries to locate the centre of glaciation in Greenland, which Professor Dawson rightly says is too far east.

These conclusions, by these authorities, seem to point so distinctly "to an ancient pole" that it seems strange that neither of them has offered that as a solution of the difficulties with which they found themselves surrounded. Two points are especially significant:

First—Our centre of glaciation is very near the location of the present magnetic pole, and may it not be that the instability of that magnetic centre is caused by a slow readjustment of the metals in the earth's crust to the change of poles?

Second—A very important point in evidence, and one which verges upon absolute proof, lies in the fact of the discovery of mammoth remains in Siberia, frozen up in the ice in such a state of preservation that the flesh provides food for the wild Siberian dogs. The mammoths were semi-tropical animals, living on profuse vegetation, and such beasts would not have forsaken their habitat for the now bleak plains of Siberia. Had they been forced south by the slow cooling of the earth, as has been suggested, not even a bone would have been left, unless in a state of petrifaction. No, they must assuredly have been overtaken by a cataclysm, and nothing can so reasonably provide such an event as our supposed change of axis.

Following the circumference of a great circle from the centre of glaciation to the present pole and continuing the same line for an equal distance beyond it, we should have an ancient latitude of about 30 degrees, a latitude easily low enough to have been the habitat of this giant pachyderm, where we may readily imagine him browsing on the luxurious vegetation, when suddenly—probably in a few days or weeks—he found himself in a latitude of 63 degrees, perhaps in the middle of an Arctic Winter; was frozen to death and entombed in his icy mausoleum, from which he is being now slowly exhumed to bear witness to the catastrophe which was the cause of his ur[illegible]

MID-SUMMER ROMANCES

LOVERS are not disposed to be sane at any season, and in midsummer, when madness is in the very air, their adventures are as numerous as the affairs of their hearts.

All for love—anywhere and anyhow—is their standard. And those who assist in their romances seem to be affected with the same midsummer madness.

Only the other day in Pittsburg the guests at the wedding of F. C. Zimmerman kidnapped him and his blushing bride immediately after the marriage ceremony and locked them in a circus menagerie wagon. Then, amid cheers and congratulations, they were drawn through the streets. Before them went a brass band to announce their coming. Behind came thousands of citizens to swell the throng of wedding guests.

Through the most crowded and fashionable streets of the East End district the loving couple were paraded in their gilded circus cage. It was the beginning of their honeymoon.

"Long life and happiness to the bride and groom!" cried the crowds. The madness of romance was upon them all. A hot July sun shone in the heavens. Fired with the love of adventure and enthusiasm for the lovers they did not recover their senses until the next day, when the city's Department of Public Safety pronounced the affair an outrage.

It was an embarrassing experience, certainly, for pretty Mrs. Zimmerman, but she is not more to be pitied than Miss Katherine Rippen, of Wyoming, who believed herself to be engaged until the man who had petitioned for the honor of her hand solemnly declared he was fast asleep when he did so.

Imagine the scene! She was young and trusting. She had made up her mind that Simon Brandt loved her, so one evening when he seemed to admire her more than ever she was not in the least surprised. He was calling upon her, and gradually his manner became more and more impassioned. At last, like the true gentleman she believed him to be, he followed up his ardor with a proposal of marriage. It was accepted, and then and there being, she declares, very much in love herself, and not a bit asleep.

The next day Miss Rippen makes no secret of her engagement, when, lo and behold, the gentleman cries out that he's amazed.

"If it happened," he says, "I must have been asleep. Consciously I never proposed."

Simon Brandt declares that he can show by witnesses that ever since he was a boy he has been a somnambulist, and that at a moment's notice he will fall asleep sitting upright and while continuing to carry on an apparently rational conversation.

A sleepy lover would never have done for Daisy Billings, who was met and wooed and won the other day at Atlantic City in among the waves when she was taking her afternoon dip.

Some one presented Mr. Frank Buckingham, a student in the Drexel Institute, Philadelphia. That was on the beach. They each disappeared into a bathhouse. When she came out she seemed to him the fairest of mermaids. He took her hand and they plunged into the waves together.

"Don't break away—ever," he whispered in her ear. Then he said some more things that she declines to repeat.

It was observed that they were hand in hand when they emerged from the water. She was blushing. He was smiling. And a few days later the engagement was announced quite as though the wooing had been the most ordinary and matter of fact in the world.

But in the midsummer madness of romance one may be wed as well as wooed anywhere, anywhere under the sun, just so that one is wed. Only the other day John R. Ballard, of the Colorado Mineral Water Company, and Miss Grace Post selected for their wedding ceremony a spot nearly three miles above the sea.

They selected the highest possible spot they could find for their wedding and invited one hundred guests to assist at it.

Bridal Donkeys Stampeded.

The trip up to the Summit House was made on donkeys. And a novel procession they formed, the bride and bridegroom leading the way with their wedding costumes strapped on behind them, and the guests following. All night they travelled, arriving at 4 o'clock in the morning. They were to be married at the first glimpse of dawn.

Up to the summit of Pike's Peak the Rev. J. W. Neeley, pastor of the Congregational Church of Manitou, had journeyed, too, to tie the knot for his young parishioners.

Way up on the platform of the steel tower stood the bridal party. Below, down an icy slope, the guides had led the donkeys to await the return of their riders. Suddenly in the early dawn there was the sound of clanging hoofs. The little beasts had broken loose and were chasing back to Manitou.

There was nothing for the bridal party but to walk back. But what did they care? They were in love, and their guests, in the midst of love and Summer, laughed, too, and were pleased.

There is no accounting for the vagaries of a lover. One will detest, for instance, the athletic girl, the next will adore her. One will say, "Give me a languishing beauty, small-waisted, pale, delicate, a hothouse flower whom I may guard and protect." The next will cry: "Vigor, rosy cheeks, firm muscles, a girl who can row and swim, who knows how to wield equally well a tennis racquet or a golf stick—that's the girl for me."

So love goes and comes, and every sort of girl has a chance. Just now it is the champion golfer of Southern California, Mabel Higgins, who is the heroine of an athletic romance.

If she hadn't had a wonderful stroke and a marvellous "putting" capacity, and if Charles Fowler, Jr., son of Representative Fowler, of New Jersey, hadn't seen her on the links exhibiting her skill—well, who knows whether anything would ever have come of it?

In a ballroom Miss Higgins might have seemed quite like a thousand other girls, all more or less charming, but on the links she reigned supreme. Never had young Fowler seen any one like her since he graduated from Yale in 1902. Such courage, such strength, such firmness, such surety, such grace! Young Fowler prostrated himself at the feet of the girl that had them all, and at the end of a game, where the champion's stroke fell off disastrously, the golfers announced their engagement.

It was golf that brought it about. There is no doubt of it in the minds of any one. Such are the accidents of love—they may occur, anywhere, anyhow. The other day it was missing a train that made a match. That sounds queer, doesn't it, but it's an actual fact.

The couple was Violet Hillyer and Frank S. Blodgett. They had both been to a reception in Newburg and both hailed from Brooklyn. It had been a delightful evening, and they had stayed late.

Mr. Blodgett, who knew Miss Hillyer slightly, asked to be permitted to escort her home. Just as they arrived at the station they heard the puffing and blowing of an outgoing train.

"Oh, I hope we haven't missed it," cried Miss Hillyer in distress. But even a maiden in distress can't hold an outgoing train. It had disappeared irrevocably, relentlessly around a curve.

"Don't be so troubled," said the young man. "I'll see what we can do."

It was just midnight. Inquiry convinced the young couple that they could not possibly reach Brooklyn before morning. They could not go back to where they had come from, because every one would be in bed.

"Terrible, isn't it?" said the girl.

"Why, no—I—I—rather like it."

It seemed to Mr. Blodgett that Miss Hillyer had never looked so charming. Her lips were tremulous with anxiety, her eyes were a trifle dim, as though she was restraining tears.

"Have courage," he whispered, "it will be all right."

"But mamma will be so angry."

"Well, let's make it all right. I always admired you. I—will you? I know a minister here—and—will you?"

She would—and so the accident had a happy and most approved end. Some girls are born lucky, as all the world knows. There are those who might miss trains forever and yet consider the incident only most disagreeable and unfortunate.

But as we have said, the paths to matrimony are varied as lovers themselves. Now, here is a girl of seventeen who weds a man of sixty—why, do you think? Because she will not take a dare.

At seventeen one has courage and the world seems a joke. One may even smile at marriage and jest at love. Charles E. Jemison, the hero of this story, is young for his sixty years, and still a beau. Laura Clayton, the heroine, is robust, and surely courageous. They were guests on the same eventful evening at a fete at Englishtown, N. J. Mr. Jemison danced attendance on pretty little Miss Clayton. He was persistent and assiduous. So much so that every one observed his devotion and made note of it, too, aloud.

Mr. Jemison was very frank about it. "It is quite true," he said. "I have admired Miss Clayton ever since she was a wee bit of a girl. It is no secret."

The girl tossed her head and smiled as though the fact was not displeasing. Her admirer plied her with refreshments and attentions. "I would like to lay the world at her feet," he declared.

"I dare you to accept the offer!" some one cried to the girl.

"Yes, we dare you!" echoed a number of others.

"You dare me?" said Mis Clayton slowly. "Well, I wont take a dare—so—"

The delighted Mr. Jemison, a widower with married children, grasped the girl's hand and begged her to make that their wedding day—"there and now."

"The dare wedding," they named it, when, a few minutes later, it was celebrated by the Rev. William Hewitt in the presence of those who had called the dare.

The jokes so long in vogue about the Summer girl's fascinations are significant. Proposals seem to follow wherever she appears. Now she is at the fox hunt amid the hills of Virginia, again she is in a restaurant, daintily eating sweet corn off a long cob and still again she is in a restaurant serving it.

The Five Saddle-Horse Prizes for the

THE last week of August has brought in the largest collection of Summer resort beauties in response to the offer of five saddle horses to the five prettiest girls at the resorts this season. The wide variety of types of the American Girl is well illustrated by the portraits printed on this page to-day.

Conceptions of beauty, like so many other matters of taste, vary widely. There is no standard of beauty; even the great fundamental question as to whether the blonde or the brunette represents the ideal type of feminine loveliness has never been settled. The popular taste varies, too, from time to time. Thus it was that the wasp-like waist and narrow, drooping shoulders and powdered face of our grandmothers were admired, while now the big, athletic, sunburned girl is the prevailing type. Much, of course, depends upon the coloring and expression.

Since this is a photographic competition much depends on the skill of the photographer in making his camera record the really best points in his subject. Many photographs utterly fail to do justice to a girl who is a recognized beauty, and many of the photographs already received in the competition would indicate that the fair competitor would have done much better in the hands of a more skilful photographer. Other photographs show unfortunate taste in dressing the hair, while still others are marred by unbecoming hats.

While the Summer Resort season begins to wane the last of August many of the resorts are merrily busy well into September, and this interesting competition will be kept open until then. Meanwhile if any young woman has had a newer and better photograph taken it is not too late to send it in.

There is interesting food for study in the representative types of pretty American girls whose photographs are reproduced herewith. No less than twelve different States are represented by contestants on this page. The New York girl who prides herself upon her smart appearance, good complexion and good looks, finds that there are smart and really pretty girls in Nebraska. The handsome Southern girls find that their Northern sisters are equally entitled to pride themselves upon their pretty faces, while the Western and Eastern Summer girls will join the representatives of the Central States in mutual admiration of one another.

New Jersey, Georgia, New York, Pennsylvania, California, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Virginia, Nebraska, West Virginia, Illinois and Ohio are the twelve States represented in the saddle horse contest photographs on this page. Of course there are other beautiful girls in every one of the DETROIT-PHOTOGRAPH-CO.

Where Mr. and Mrs. Ballard Were Married at Sunrise.

T-PHOTOGRAPH CO.

The moral of all this is that no girl should lose hope of winning a husband.

There wasn't a thought of marriage in the mind of Martha Mathilde Bemarkt when James R. Broderick, whose name she didn't even know, dropped into the little quick lunch restaurant in St. Louis where she was serving meals.

He happened to be a consulting engineer from Maryland, who had acquired a large fortune and who was bent on acquiring a still larger one. There wasn't a thought of marriage in his mind either when he dropped off a car and spied the Eighth avenue restaurant. What he was thinking about was whether he should order steaks or chops, and if he should have fried potatoes or baked.

"Please, sir, your order?"

There was something in the voice that pleased him. It rang true, and at the same time sweet. It had just a hint of interest in it that was like music to a tired, hungry man.

The place was crowded, but somehow this young woman seemed to have time to stand quietly and restfully beside him, while he searched the bill of fare. He looked up and saw that she had, of all the things he most admired in woman, a placid brow, smooth and unwrinkled. Above it her hair lay touched with gold in glossy bands, her eyes were blue and serene. It seemed to him suddenly not to matter so much what he ordered, as the way he ordered it.

Dozens of black-robed, white aproned waitresses were rushing here and there through the restaurant when this one glided off quietly with his order. It seemed to him to be perfectly filled when she returned, and he actually began to think then and there, after having heard her pronounce about four words, what a nice person she would be to have about always, interested in one's comfort and welfare.

He thought about that proposition a great deal in the days that followed, and being a man accustomed to having in his own way, he determined to bring it about.

As a beginning he haunted the quick-lunch place. My! how many meals he ate! And never would he sit at any table but "Martha Mathilde's," as they called her in the restaurant.

Once on her day off he was served by another waitress. From her he extracted information. Martha Mathilde was a German with only an aged mother belonging to her, whose sole support she was. Possibly he might be introduced. Yes, the waitress, her friend, would undertake the task.

MR AND MRS ZIMMERMAN WERE DRAGGED THROUGH THE STREETS IN A CAGE.

"Love will find the way" is a proverb as old as the hills. It means that there is a way out of even such a difficult position as that of James R. Broderick; it means that he found a way to be properly presented to Martha Mathilde; it means that he courted her successfully, and won her in the end, which is, of course, the only end to every true romance.

"Martha Mathilde, the quick lunch waitress, is the mistress now of a lovely country home in the suburbs of Baltimore, called Paradise.

Another restaurant romance not quite so happy in the ending is that of Winifred May Cavanagh. She paused over her cob of corn to listen to a proposal from William D. Van Vleck. She was not serving it, but eating it.

Daintily she held it poised in one hand when suddenly Mr. Van Vleck, she says, remarked that she was adorable. At the same time he assured her that very few girls can look adorable over a cob of corn. On top of that, in a loud tone of voice, she declares that he asked her to marry him. She accepted, and then he repented, evidently.

Having been in a restaurant, Miss Cavanagh proposes to make use of it. She says at least three or four of the waiters there that day heard the proposal. They will be called as witnesses in the breach of promise suit which she declares she will bring unless Mr. Van Vleck lives up to his promise.

Here is a bride who was won at a fox hunt—Corinne Blackburn, the daughter of Senator Blackburn, of Kentucky. She is as much at home in a saddle as most women are in a rocking chair.

She met the man she married the other day at a fox hunt in Virginia. He was there for the hunt. So was she. And their courtship seemed to begin with it.

"Mr. Gale, of New York," some one said, and nothing else seemed to be necessary. These two young people gave every evidence of understanding each other perfectly from that moment. They were together during the hunt and after the hunt. She loved horses and he loved horses, but they had found they loved each other.

That's the way the romance unfolded itself and led in just a few short weeks to the ceremony performed the other day at the Ebbitt House in Washington.

Because She Saved His Life.

Courage, of course, is a trait that any man must admire, and when it extends to the saving of his life where is he who could disdain it? However, the chance to save the life of the man she is going to marry rarely falls to the lot of woman. Katharine Paul, who is now the wife of Leslie Bryant, of Philadelphia, is the exception that proves the rule.

The girl's rescue of Bryant, who was then a stranger to her, was thrilling in the extreme. As superintendent of the Hammonton Electric Light, Heat and Power Company, he was repairing wires on what is known as the Egg Harbor road. Suddenly a cable broke and, falling over live wires became charged. In ignorance of this Bryant grasped it and was thrown to the ground.

His companions stood around helpless, fearing to touch him. As chance had it, Miss Paul happened to be standing near by on her sister's porch. In an instant she had collected all her wits. She grabbed a broom and rushed to the rescue. With it she pried out the wire that had already begun to sear Bryant's hands. He was saved, burned, but alive.

When he recovered he sought his rescuer. He found her as charming as such a woman should be. He lost no time in telling her so—from the fact of the wedding the other day.

When once a man or woman has been transfixed by Cupid's darts the wooing speeds upon what poets have been pleased to call the wings of love.

It took just six days, according to the chroniclers, for Thomas Ogden, the rich Liverpool tobacco merchant, to fall in love with Florence Boese, of New York. And it was a song that did it.

Miss Boese is stopping at the Hotel Aspinwall, in fashionable Lenox, Mass., but not solely as a guest. She is poor and uses her voice to earn money as an entertainer for the hotel. Thomas Ogden happened to be one of the guests.

Miss Boese is young, pretty and altogether as charming as her voice. The song she sang seemed to go to the soul of Mr. Ogden. He listened absorbed. The girl declared afterward she could feel the presence of an unusual listener. The singer and the listener were presented by some kind friend and when the listener set sail on his Liverpool business it was with the understanding that the girl he left behind him in Lenox would become his wife on his return in the Fall.

"In this day of automobiles let no unwise parent try to interfere with Cupid and his desires," says Dayton K. Wentworth. He has proved the futility of such interference by eloping with the daughter of Druggist Willett, of Belford, New Jersey. For the purpose he had a great big touring car.

A strong smell of gasoline and a loud choo-choo penetrated over the Willett lawn to the Willett house. Instantly Miss Willett sprang to her feet, tripped over the lawn and into the car, which sped off, in spite of Papa Willett's protestations and pursuit, to the First Baptist Church in Bath avenue.

When Papa Willett, who had only horses, arrived behind them, the young couple were receiving the congratulations of the minister.

Papa Willett had opposed the match and the young lover had hired an automobile. There is the story in a nutshell.

The New York Subway, that most unsentimental of rapid transit routes, filled with the roar of rushing electric trains and the depressing effects of inadequate ventilation, has brought forth a real romance. Its heroine, Miss Helen Dowd, had already attracted the attention of the multitudes who travel by the Subway route morning and night, for she presided over the newsstand in the Bleecker street station on the uptown side, and was only nineteen and very pretty in a dark-haired, dark-eyed way.

One day William Bardreau a young man connected with the New York Fire Department, who lives away up in Harlem, sought his home-bound train at the Bleecker street station for a change, and, stopping to buy an evening paper, found himself transfixed by the smiling eyes of Miss Dowd.

Then suddenly the girl blushed. Noting that blush, the young man blushed, too. Then, because he was "rattled," he rushed for his train.

But next day, and the next, and the next, the Bleecker street station drew him like a magnet when his work was done.

This would not do, so on the fourth meeting Mr. Bardreau "popped the question."

Miss Dowd asked for time to consider this unexpected proposition. A few days ago she made Mr. Bardreau deliriously happy by promising to marry him next month.

other States, and space alone, or rather the absence of space, prevents the reproduction of their photographs to-day.

The five saddle horses which will be presented by this newspaper to the five prettiest girls at the Summer resorts this season will be all saddled and bridled. Indeed, the saddles alone are a most valuable prize. They are the very highest grade "Cross" London-made side saddles—the handsomest product of the Mark Cross Company, headquarters of the fashionable set in both England and America for harness, saddlery and ultra-smart travelling and small leather goods. The five saddles are of the very finest English pigskin, and have the fashionable new flat seat now in favor among the West End horsewomen of London and seen on all the bridle paths around New York, Boston and all the other large cities. No finer saddles than these can be produced at any price. Appropriate "Cross" bridles will be presented with the horses and saddles. These, too, contain every element of smartness and are of the very best material and workmanship.

Duplicates of the saddles may be seen at the American establishments of the Mark Cross Company at No. 210 Fifth avenue and No. 253 Broadway, in New York, and No. 20 Summer street, Boston. Photographs of them are also to be seen at Roos Brothers' store in Kearney street, San Francisco, and at W. K. Cowen & Co.'s, on Michigan Boulevard, in Chicago, who are the Western agents of the Mark Cross Company.

It is, of course, impossible to give a description of the five prize horses themselves, because they have not yet been selected. In fact, no selections of the live stock will be made until after the names of the prize winners, their weight, height and homes are known.

Horses are like good clothes—they should always be bought to order, and this is exactly what will be done in selecting the prize horses for the five prettiest girls at the Summer resorts.

Another thing to be taken into consideration in buying the horses is that animals reared in one part of this country are apt to die before they can become thoroughly acclimatized if shipped to another State a few thousands of miles away. For that reason the purchasing of the five prize horses will probably be arranged for through the medium of the best market for fine stock convenient to the home town of each of the five prize winners. In this way, provided the prize winners are scattered, the tedious and dangerous railway journeys which some of the prizes would have to take if the horses were all to be bought in one market will be obviated.

It may be that the prize winners will be at liberty to make their own selection of a horse. The pretty girl who thinks she would look her best on a gray horse may not be quite so well pleased if she receives a black. Then the other pretty prize winner who feels sure that a bay horse will suit her complexion best would feel just the least bit disappointed if a pure white horse, with a long, sweeping tail and flowing mane, was sent to her instead.

Every care will be taken to present to each prize winner exactly the kind of horse she likes the best.

Send in your best photograph with your full name and address. Mail it to SADDLE HORSE PRIZE, care of this newspaper. We cannot promise to return the photographs.

Boating—The Summer Girl's Best Beauty Exercise

"If You Have Rowed Conscientiously and Regularly Every Day I Will Guarantee That There Is Not a Flabby Inch of Flesh on Your Entire Body," Says Caissarato, the Famous Beauty Expert, Telling How to Remove Resulting Skin Blemishes.

BOATING—canoeing, rowing, yachting—is the healthiest of exercises. I should advise all women to be on the water during the Summer months as much as possible.

Oh, I know what all my fair readers are going to exclaim at this advice—"But my complexion!" I hear the protest from all sides. And I cannot deny that the skin is assailed by all sorts of blemishes on the water.

Freckles, tan, roughness, redness, sunburn—yes, they are all more apt to follow a Summer on the water than a Summer spent lolling under veils and shade hats on a shaded porch.

But, on the other hand, spend a Summer in rowing, my fair reader, and you will find that you have gained in suppleness, in beauty, in health, in vigor. You will find that you carry yourself with new dignity with your head held up, your chest out and, naturally, your stomach in. Your arms will have acquired roundness, your body will have new curves. If you are inclined to freckle you will doubtless have laid in a crop, but what you have gained otherwise from exercise on the water is worth while. If you have rowed conscientiously and regularly every day I will guarantee that there is not a flabby inch of flesh on your entire body.

Firmness of muscle and a good carriage are, every woman knows, tremendous factors in the way of beauty.

I prefer the exercise of rowing to tennis, for instance, for women, especially because it is less violent. Then it is what may be called rhythmical, regular in its movements. It develops the muscles normally and equally. Proper rowing calls into play the muscles of the back, legs, neck, as well as those of the arms.

Rowing Superior to Tennis.

Rowing is even a splendid exercise for nervous people. The same motion over and over, done without too much force, executed rhythmically and smoothly, acts as a sedative.

If you are too stout, try it with as much vigor as you can put into your stroke. Slip on a sweater and go to work regularly, every day increasing your distance and your force. You will find your flesh gradually hardening and your figure acquiring curves.

Examine even the average sailor and you will find that he is graceful, sinuous, clear-eyed—tanned perhaps, even freckled—but his cheeks glow and his brow is peaceful. Regular exercise and an out of door life in the fresh sea air make for happiness. One month of boating should transform the dyspeptic, those inclined to the blues, those who are apt to be anemic, those who have too much flesh, those who are nervous, those who are too thin.

You see I recommend it to every one, even though it be attended with what we may call menaces to beauty.

Blisters and Spots, Naturally.

The first of the small miseries that one has from rowing is usually the blister, which makes its appearance wherever the oar rubs against the skin.

As soon as you can, I should advise piercing the blister with a sterilized needle, let the water out of it, wash the place with equal parts of hydrogen and plain water, and then powder it lightly with:

Talcum powder	2 grams
Starch powder	10 grams
Oxide of zinc	2 grams

After a few hours there will be no trace of the blister.

However, but few women mind these blisters. Freckles disturb them much more. Thin, delicate people are much more apt to have freckles than healthy, plump ones. However, red-haired people and blondes are also subject to them, even when they are apparently in perfect health.

With all the veils, cold creams and pomades in existence it seems impossible to keep freckles away absolutely. You can only hope to diminish their quantity slightly, and I should advise you to try to get rid of them only on your return to town or after the Autumn is well advanced. This is not so simple as many beauty specialists declare. However, here is a treatment I should recommend:

Three times a day paint the face first with:

Potassium iodide	120 gr.
Iodine	6 gr.
Glycerine	3 dr.
Infusion of rose	4 oz.

Use a small camel's-hair brush and apply the lotion until a slight yellowish color appears. After that wait fifteen or twenty minutes, and then, with a bit of gauze dipped in the following mixture, bathe the face until the discoloration has disappeared:

Sodium hyposulphite	240 gr.
Rose water	16 oz.

Continue this treatment for a whole week in the daytime only. At night on going to bed spread over the face a little of the following pomade:

Glycerite of starch	3 oz.
Lanolin	1 oz.

Leave the pomade on all night.

At the end of a week of this treatment tan, sunburn and a quantity of freckles will disappear and the skin will be clear and white, so that you can see what discoloration remains.

If there are many freckles left I should advise some one of the following remedies.

Glycerine	2 oz.
Rose water	1 oz.
Alcohol	1 oz.

If at the end of several applications it makes the face red and causes an inflammation of the skin, you can soothe it with a little cream made of glycerite of starch and lanolin. I should also advise stopping the lotion until the inflammation has subsided.

In using these lotions always be careful of the mouth and eyes.

Now, here is another recipe if the first one does not prove efficacious. After having washed and dried the face thoroughly with tepid water, apply night and morning the following:

Zinc sulphocarbolate	60 gr
Oil of lemon	1 dr
Alcohol	1 oz
Collodion flexible	1 oz

Now, the treatments I have given you are for light cases of freckles. There are others that are deep and extremely difficult to treat. The treatment for them is dangerous because the skin has to be removed deep down and infection of some sort may follow. Here are recipes which may be safely tried when every antiseptic precaution is taken by some skilled person who understands the danger and how to prevent it.

Apply over night the following:

Mercuric chloride	6 gr
Alcohol	1 oz
Green soap	2 oz
Oil of lavender	10 drops

In the morning wash the face gently with tepid water. After several applications the skin will become red, then it will begin to peel. As soon as the peeling begins stop the lotion and apply a little of the following cream:

Spermaceti	120 gr
White wax	120 gr
Oil of sweet almonds	4 dr
Salicylic acid	16 gr
White precipitate	4 gr

Another remedy that is recommended consists in the use of resorcin soap. Wash the face in it three times a day, letting the suds dry on the skin. The skin, after a few days, will begin to dry and peel. Then stop the soap and use the cream given above.

Still another recipe is this:

Zinc oxide	5 grammes
Talcum, powdered	5 grammes
Castile soap, powdered	30 grammes
Lanoline	4 grammes
Tinct. benzoin	5 grammes
Distilled water	46 grammes
Glycerin	5 grammes

Apply the above every night.

After several days peeling will set in. Then replace the pomade with some soothing lotion, this, for instance:

Gelatin	80 gr
Boric acid	120 gr
Glycerin	3 oz
Distilled water	5 oz

Bathe the face two or three times a day with it.

Peeling the face has been in vogue for some time as a rejuvenating process. By the use of caustic, carbolic acid and corrosive sublimate the skin is not only destroyed and peeled off deeply, according to the strength of the mixture, but a great quantity of the blood is drawn to the surface of the muscles. This swells the muscles and gives them a temporary vitality which is most deceptive. Sometimes this rejuvenation lasts for two or three years, but this is rare.

Usually, this is what happens after this much advertised taking off of the skin has been accomplished. After the first month, and, perhaps for two or three months even, the skin remains firm, fresh and tinted. Frequently this rosy tint is in terrible contrast to the woman herself, whose body shows age.

Gradually, little by little, the muscular excitement dies down, the cheeks begin to fall, the eyes look puffy, the skin becomes the color of old ivory. The patient begins to look as though she were the victim of some blood trouble and certainly older than before she tried the experiment of exciting her muscles by taking off the skin.

This idea of renewing youth is not new. Juvenal in his satires speaks of the aged coquettes who shut themselves up for half of each month to paint their faces with cabbage juice in order to renew their vitality and youth.

Congestion and Redness.

The skin sometimes becomes, after a day in the water, of a real brick-red tinge. When this occurs be careful to limit your diet as to red meats. Eat milky food. Then apply to the face compressions dipped in warm boric water mixed equally with extract of witch hazel. Or, if more convenient, fresh milk mixed with the juice of a quarter of a lemon will do as well. Almond meal made into a paste with milk is also good if applied to the face over night.

If these simple remedies fail, try one of the following:

Three times a day bathe the face with

Alum	8 grammes
Borax	8 grammes
Tincture benzoin	6 grammes
Rose water	200 grammes

Let this dry on the face.

Night and morning paint the face with

Sulfure de potasse	2 grammes
Teinture de benjoin	2 grammes
Eau de roses	100 grammes
Eau de fleurs d'oromger	100 grammes

Sodium hyposulphite	10 grammes
Glycerine	20 grammes
Rose water	120 grammes

Use very little soap while the skin is congested.

Of course one gets in a heat rowing. This may induce excessive perspiration, which in its turn will cause a train of irritations. Small sort of pimply blisters may appear. Try bathing them with aromatic vinegar or cologne water, particularly when they are accompanied by itching. After this powder with something of this sort:

Starch, powdered	100 grammes
Boracic acid	5 grammes
Bismuth salicylate	5 grammes
Orris root powder	5 grammes

Excessive perspiration destroys the elasticity and firmness of the skin, and makes it oily. The face in such case should be washed twice a day with tar soap, then rinsed with cold water, containing either liquid ammonia or cologne water.

For Excessive Perspiration.

Spirit of lavender, simple	25 grammes
Essence of peppermint (white)	25 grammes
Essence of lemon	25 grammes
Tincture of myrrh	25 grammes
Tincture of soap bark	25 grammes
Sodium borax	10 grammes

Put a teaspoonful of this mixture into a glass of tepid water, and bath the face two or three times a day, letting the liquid dry without wiping.

1. Blackheads are apt to come in the wake of excessive perspiration, so they may be called one of the evils of Summer and heat.

At night after washing the face with naphthol soap and hot water press out the blackheads, and then apply a little of this pomade:

Resorcin	60 grammes
Zinc oxide	120 grammes
Starch	120 grammes
Petrolatum	240 grammes

2. At night before going to bed wash the face with hot water and soap, dry it and then bathe it with:

Ether	1 oz.
Alcohol	6 dr.
Aromatic spirits of ammonia	2 dr.

As to Pimples.

Pimples are asked about so frequently in this hot weather that I will give a simple remedy for them here.

1. Several times a day bathe them with a little of the following:

Ichthyol	90	gr.
Ether	2½	dr.
Alcohol	4	dr.

2. Apply the following night and morning:

Carbolic acid	15	drops
Borax	60	gr.
Glycerine	4	dr.
Tannin	30	gr.
Alcohol	1	oz.
Rose water	2½	oz.

Exercise regularly and persistently and see that you eat food easily digested.

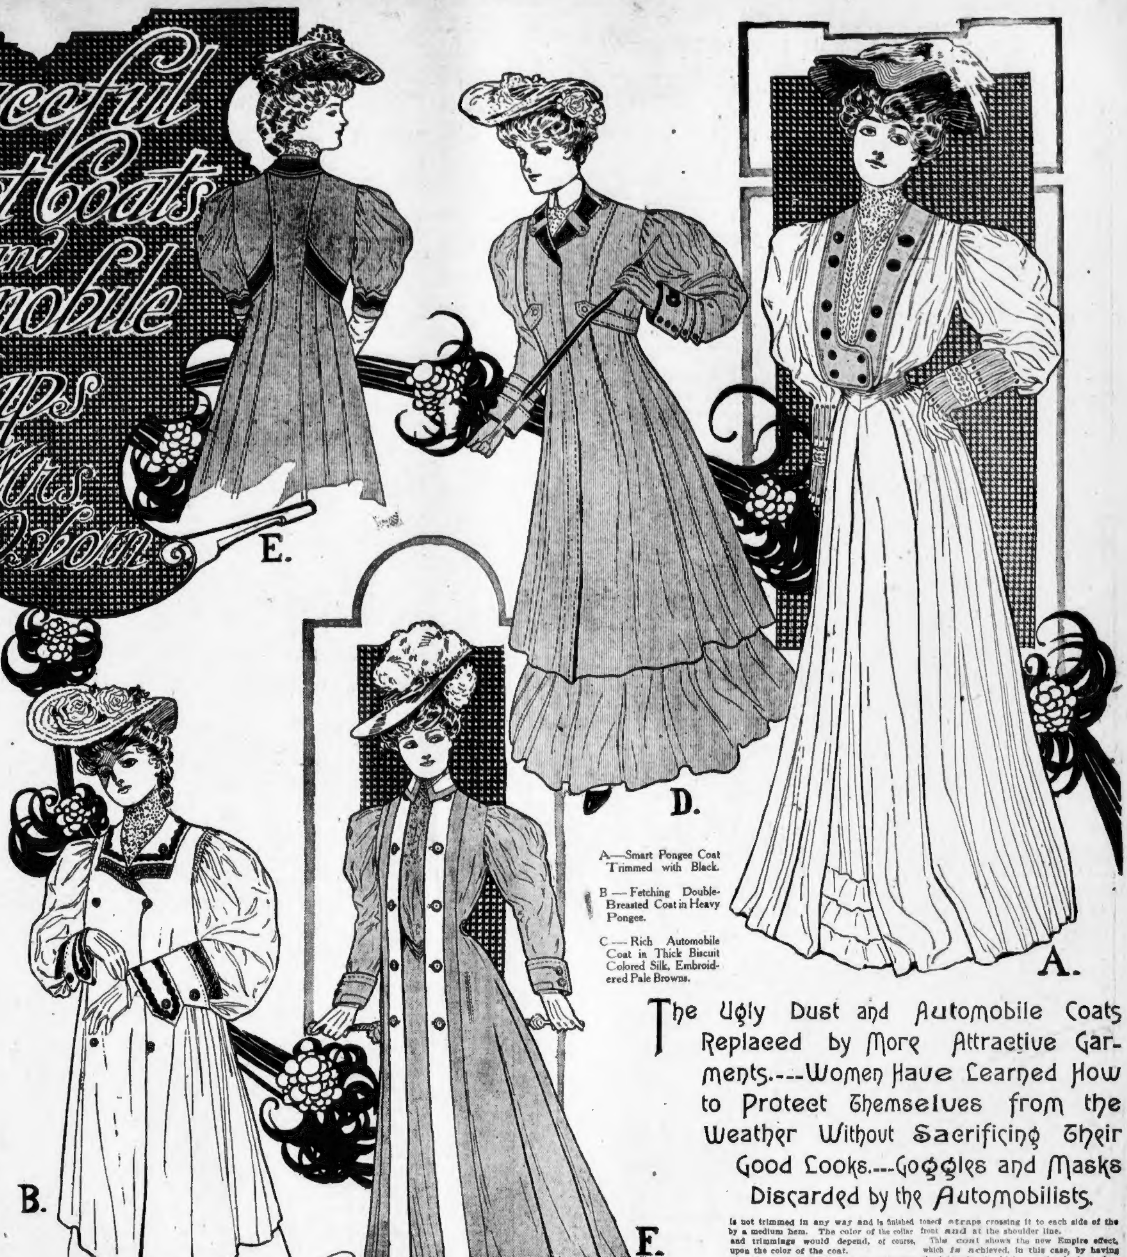
Graceful Dust Coats and Automobile Wraps

By Mrs. Osborn



A—Smart Pongee Coat Trimmed with Black.

C—Rich Automobile Coat in Thick Biscuit Colored Silk, Embroidered Pale Browns.

he Smart Dust Coat Matches he Gown with Vhich It Is Worn

The Ugly Dust and Automobile Coats Replaced by More Attractive Garments.---Women Have Learned How to Protect Themselves from the Weather Without Sacrificing Their Good Looks.---Goggles and Masks Discarded by the Automobilists.

n't so long ago since women who velled and took long drives in the ntry or went automobiling fancied y must make themselves unattract- rder to do these things in a proper t could have been uglier than the -iline-looking, ugly and unbecoming au- obile coats worn by women; the hideous aps, with visors; the flapping, ungraceful ust coats, which were enough to take way every bit of attractiveness from even he prettiest woman; the frog-like goggles nd imp-like masks which women wore on utomobile trips?

These and other eccentricities in the way f outing garments for both fair and wet eather have made one wonder just when omen would come to their senses and anage to be properly clothed for outing urposes and look their sweet selves at the ame time?

A reaction has taken place in the make f dust and automobile coats and riding nd traveling hats. Women now look for ecoming headgear and for coats that show e charming lines as can be compassed by a rrap, and that are dressy and feminine n appearance, entirely suggestive of the martly-gowned woman and not of an un- ovely anybody, as was formerly the case.

For traveling and yachting purposes broad the long coat is most often seen nade up of cream colored tweed-homespun r white blanket cloth. Alpaca, too, is a ery popular material for outing coats on he Continent and in England, while, for hort excursions and race meets, as well as ourneys of inconsiderable length, tussore ilk is effective and smart. The same aterials and makes are adopted in this ountry, only the American woman likes a it more style and fit to her outing coats than content her foreign sisters.

ike the Highwayman's Coat.

Most of the long outing coats are modelled fter the Guards', the Highwayman's coat, he new, hop-seamed Chesterfield coat, the hinese and the long, loose soldier's coat. hese are modified to suit the figures of he wearers, and a great many of the new- t coats have fitted backs, with full skirts, nd partly fitted fronts with a loose front anel from neck to hem.

Except when built for dressy occasions and automobile coats are never supposed be very dressy for touring purposes— e style of coat has sleeves built loosely ough to go easily over the most delicate waist sleeves. The dust coat and auto- bile coat are the only kind which do not the changing of sleeves from bag- ness and puffs to medium fullness and almost tight fit.

This modification in sleeves is seen in e outing coats, to a certain extent, for ey are not nearly as voluminous as be- re, for the reason that the sleeves which ey cover are smaller, but they must main- in a moderate fullness and a certain dth of armhole.

Generally speaking, these sleeves are long, afford all necessary protection, but some- mes they are made in the usual three- arter and elbow lengths so popular at esent. Their elaboration lies entirely in e decorations upon the collars, cuffs, ont flaps and sometimes belts and pockets.

Afternoon coats worn in automobiles and ose worn for calling and for short drives not come within the scope of this article all. Only the simpler forms of coats for outdoor sports, long journeys, and when coats intended as a protection are really necessary, are dealt with.

The smart dust coat matches the gown with which it is worn, and is thus suggestive of the suit coat. With it is worn a dainty lingerie waist, so that when the coat is removed a woman looks fresh in her pretty waist and well made skirt.

Pongee is the best material for an Autumn dust and automobile coat. It cleans perfectly, is a smart fabric, and can be procured in every weight and color. The different weights have different names, but for general descriptive purposes the rich, raw silks which are so fashionable at present may all be termed pongee.

Silk That Does Not Crush.

Only those who have seen the heavy qualities of this silk realize in what thick and beautiful weaves it can be had. It does not crush so easily as other silks and can be shaken out, hung up and left to resume its natural, uncrinkled folds.

A new trimming in the bands used upon these coats is made of knife pleating edged with narrow folds, or braid of some kind, or allowed to stand out loosely above and below the stitching in a sort of little flat frill effect. Trimming with self folds is also popular and newer than most forms of trimming for simple things.

For long trips glorias and cravenette cloths are worn a great deal by those who want something very serviceable and practical. Coats of glorias and cravenette are in perfectly good form and, of course, do not require the care and cleaning necessary to keep the other styles of coats described in good condition.

In Figure A is shown a pongee coat suitable for automobiling and traveling purposes. It may be in light biscuit color or any suitable shade that harmonizes with the dress and occasion.

Its bloused bodice is pleated on the shoulder and gathered to the belt. Medium full sleeves are tucked from the elbow to the cuff. This consists of the same sort of tucks, headed by a band of embroidered silk. Each pleat in the bottom of this cuff, at the wrist, is held down by a button, and the pleats between the cuff and elbow are trimmed with buttons at both ends.

A black silk collar is stitched in a bias band around the neck of the biscuit colored coat, the black silk sloping down into a square front effect around a vest of biscuit colored taffeta in open embroidery. The black silk band and panels have two rows of soutache braid, in pongee color, and are also trimmed with large black silk crocheted cord buttons.

The skirt of this dust coat is full enough to fall gracefully over the dress skirt. It is not trimmed in any way and is finished by a medium hem. The color of the collar and trimmings would depend, of course, upon the color of the coat.

In figure B is illustrated an attractive coat, for the same uses, made of very heavy pongee in natural color. This silk is so heavy that it is like gros-grain in quality without the weave of gros-grain. It is double-breasted, with fitted shoulders and loose, but not full, skirts. The collar is of a different material. It may be made of cloth, panne or a different sort of silk. It is trimmed with two kinds of black braid and black crocheted buttons.

Medium full, loose sleeves are gathered into the armhole with three close rows of gathers. At the back, below the elbow, the sleeve is pleated into a deep triple cuff. The lower cuff has a pointed flap trimmed with braid and with buttons in the flap, while the upper cuff is made of the same material as the collar and is buttoned together. Above that comes another cuff effect in black, edged with a fold and trimmed with two rows of braid.

With a Wide Cape Collar.

Figure C shows a coat of heavy silk in biscuit color. It is a soft, yet stiff silk, and is loosely fitted at the top and hangs to within two or three inches of the edge of the skirt.

The wide cape collar around the neck and shoulders hangs down the front in stole effects and is richly embroidered in a raised design of flowers and dragons in pale shades of brown. This cape extends over the top of the armhole, to which the sleeve is loosely fitted. The sleeve widens at the bottom and has a big turned-up cuff of embroidery. The coat is almost fitted to the figure in the back, showing admirably its graceful outlines, and it fastens down the front underneath the stole edges.

This coat shows the new Empire effect, which is achieved, in this case, by having the belt begin high up the back underneath the sides of a fitted back piece and come downward under the arms in a curve. From under the arms the belt curves upward on each side the front and terminates in points with buttons in each.

Upon the front of the cuff is a black band, and black folds trim the edges of it, with two similar folds above it around the sleeve. Three buttons fasten the back of the cuff and one is set in the back of each fold.

The sleeve is simply gathered at the top and may be long, three-quarter length or elbow length, with the cuff below the elbow. The back of the coat is fitted above the Empire belt and is stitched in pleats for a short distance below it.

The coat is fitted in the back with a double pleat from the shoulder to a short belt, which extends across the back and buttons to each side of it, where the pleats are released, allowing the fullness to fall loosely in the skirt.

The coat is partly fitted to the front borders, where a pleat extends from the shoulder to the hem. A wide band of contrasting material or color trims each edge, and this is buttoned back with large buttons. Plain, loose gathered coat sleeves are finished with a turned-up cuff and a band on the cuff has two buttons in the back. The trimming on the collar consists of a simple fold.

The simplicity of these dust and automobile coats indicates that, in order to achieve graceful lines and a smart appearance, they may only be made by a skilled tailor or modiste. The long coat, made by inexperienced fingers, looks too woeful an object for feminine contemplation.

REAL HUMAN NATURE IN THE SONG, "I'M A POOR UNHAPPY MAID."

BY CURTIS DUNHAM.

Words and Music Printed as a Separate Section of This Newspaper to Illustrate This Article on Comic Songs.

THERE are persons who will tell you that it is sacrilege to permit the divine art of music to be associated with words that are frivolous. They make no objection to that fundamental monstrosity, the "comic valentine,"—although every child knows that Valentine is the patron saint of true lovers—but comic songs shock their musical sensibilities. They find it hard to forgive Wagner for producing "Die Meistersinger."

Fortunately, the great, hard-working and necessarily cheaply amused mass of the population is more logical. When all the boys and girls in all the blocks of all the cities and towns sing a comic song—the latest popular ditty—from morning till night, that is pretty good proof that the song contributes to their happiness. It is a harmless way of being happy—no one has risen to declare that "Razzle Dazzle" led fresh victims to the demon rum! Nor did "T'row Him Down, McClusky" increase the general combativeness.

No one who finds pleasure in singing comic songs is likely to make the mistake of taking himself too seriously—except, perhaps, actors, who sing them professionally when they are convinced that they ought to be playing Hamlet. It is one of several ways of being light-hearted. Some other ways have disagreeable after-effects; popular comic songs—because they have to be good to be popular—leave no bad taste in the mouth. There isn't one katzenjammer in a hundred of them.

Eddie Foy.

A love song may be maudlin and illiterate in its words and yet gain popularity if it have a pretty melody, but a successful comic song has to be clever. It must be a work of art, especially in its verses. The verses must make their "point"—a separate point for each verse—and the central idea must be genuinely humorous.

Yet the cleverest and most artistic comic song writers are not always the ones who appeal to the largest audiences. In the comic operas of Gilbert and Sullivan there are songs whose verses have become classic models. Their wit and their satire are masterly and their form perfect; yet very few of these songs have ever appealed to the people, except as sung in character upon the stage. There is too much art and too little nature in them; they are highly esteemed by the thousands, but the emotions of the millions do not respond to their subtleties.

Nothing is more laughter-inspiring than the comical side of real human nature. The novelists, the poets, the dramatists and the painters whose characters and incidents are felt to be true to life are those whose names become household words. People do not care so much who write the songs they likes but those songs, especially if of the comic variety, will be found to strike straight home at some delicious human foible with which their own experience has made them familiar.

A good comic song is human nature in a nutshell. That is what makes the art so difficult. In three or four or half a dozen verses the song writer has to crystalize material, the result of his first-hand observations, which the story writer would spread over a dozen printed pages. Such condensation is the quintessence of art, yet if the effort be too apparent the spirit of the performance is gone and the mark is missed. Perhaps this is why some of the popular songs have so many literary faults.

In comic songs the composer has to repress himself. He must sacrifice everything in his melody and accompaniment that fails to bear out the significance of the words. He can indulge in no embellishments of his theme—all must be plain sailing for the singer, with as much congruity between word and note as melodic intervals are capable of. After this, about all the composer can do to exhibit his ingenuity is to spatter his piano accompaniment with jocular or lugubrious phrases calculated to titillate the ear as though calling attention to the point of the joke.

These remarks have general applicability to the song printed to-day as a separate section of this newspaper, "I'm a Poor Unhappy Maid." No one can accuse either the author or the composer of over-refinement in his methods; but it becomes at once apparent that both make their point in the most direct and natural way.

We are not shocked at this making sport of the physical shortcomings of the unhappy maid in question, for the verses are autobiographical. She tells her own story, and by the way she piles on the agony we know that she rather enjoys being the heroine of the dismal situations she describes. Every observing person knows that girls who have long been fully aware that they are not pretty are often the most cheerful of their sex. With all vanity far behind them and a sense of humor well developed they lead the most unselfish of lives, finding happiness in promoting the happiness of others.

In this song she contributes to the joy of nations by giving the dismal details of her inability to captivate the other sex. But she does it in a way that shows plainly how much she enjoys the joke at her own expense. She is plaintive on the surface and all gurgling with merriment underneath, her very choice of words proves that, and enables us to laugh with her:

I'm a poor, unhappy maid,
Love games I've never played—
My poor heart is shattered,
With grief I'm all spattered,
I'm a poor, unhappy maid.

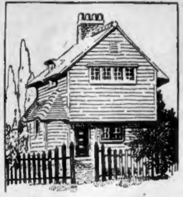
A poor unhappy maid who confesses that with grief she's all spattered does not seem an object for sympathy, so we can laugh and be unashamed though she wails:

My face is full of wrinkles, and they are so deep and wide
That when the flies play hide and seek in my poor face, they hide.

The amount of mimetic ability scattered all over the country, which finds a natural outlet in songs of this class, is quite astonishing. Every village—almost every family—has its "natural born actor." These clever and cheerful persons love a comic song that gives them an opportunity to "act the part." That is the reason why this class of comic songs so often gains a circulation that amazes the serious minded.

FIREPROOF HOUSES THAT CAN BE BUILT FOR $750.

Many Samples on View at English Exhibition.



Patent Siding and Tile Roof.

THE Duke of Devonshire has opened a unique exhibition for the purpose of teaching the laborers and farm hands of England how cheaply a pretty and comfortable cottage can be built.

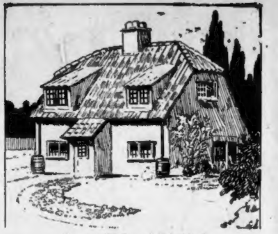
Believing that the decay of the agricultural class in England is partly caused by the general opinion that no decent cottage can be built on the wages of a farm laborer, the Duke of Devonshire and other philanthropic Englishmen originated this exhibition.

The amount of money which the average thrifty laborer would be willing to put into a house is about $750 or its equivalent in English currency. This was determined by a careful inquiry in rural districts.

A prize of 100 pounds was offered for the best cottage built for $750 or less. The cottage was required to have the following specifications:

One living room, a kitchen, a pantry, and three bedrooms. Two of the bedrooms must have fireplaces, and the three together must afford a cubic air space of not less than 2,000 feet, while none of the rooms may be under seven feet six inches in height.

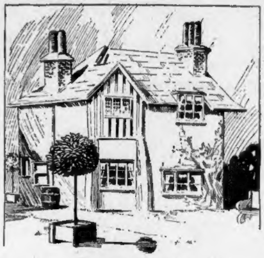
Contractors, architects, manufacturers of building material and others have built houses side by side in this contest.



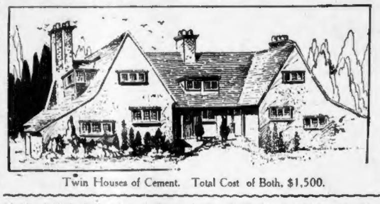
Cement Walls and Tile Roof.

One of the first cottages to attract attention by its picturesque exterior is the "Uralite" cottage, No. 53, designed by Messrs. Wheeler and Son. The foundations and chimneys are of brick, the remainder of the structure, including the roof, being of fireproof Uralite boarding, which is secured to and protects the timber framing. It is claimed for this method of construction that it is fire-resisting, and that it affords a cottage cool in Summer and warm in Winter. The design is an excellent example of simplicity, good planning, and taste.

Quite close to the above is the "Nook" cottage, No. 50, designed by Messrs. Clare & Ross, which, like the "Pralite" exhibit, has all its rooms on one floor. It is constructed of coke breeze concrete, with a special system of lattice skeleton framing; the walls are covered with rough cast, and the roof with Major's double Roman tiles. The living room, which measures 15 feet by 12 feet, and is 9 feet high, has a recessed angle for sitting by the fire, and the excellent Yorkshire cooking range heats a large boiler in the pantry, which in turn feeds a capital bath.



Plaster Walls, Slate Roof.



Twin Houses of Cement. Total Cost of Both, $1,500.

The small timber-built, covered yard adjoining the scullery, and enabling washing, etc., to be done outside the cottage, is also a good feature; and every visitor must be impressed by the durability and general arrangement of this charming little house.

One of the wonders of the exhibition is the cottage erected in about one week by the Cement Products Company, which is not illustrated in the official catalogue.

The cheapness and rapidity of this method of building is very remarkable, and of the efficiency of the material to resist climatic influences there can be no doubt. Cottages built by this method would, we think, look best in an upland district; their appearance is a little too austere for our South country villages, but perhaps this objection could be met by rough casting the wall surfaces. The cost would even then be less than ordinary brickwork.

Another excellent cottage, also of concrete blocks, is No. 58, the exhibit of the Concrete Machinery Company; this building has all the appearance of being erected of fair tooled ashlar, with rusticated groins, and the effect is not at all inartistic, the red roofing tiles forming a pleasant color contrast.

Besides these and many other remarkable cottages which their owners will duplicate for $750, there are the more expensive houses.

These vary in expense up to $2,000. Mr. Baillie Scott has entered a double cottage at this figure which cost $175 a room.

This house probably draws more attention than any other on account of its charming appearance.

The long, steeply sloping and unbroken roofs of old tiles give a charmingly restful and homelike impression, and the houses sit naturally on their sites, blend with and form part of the landscape. The feature of the plan is the large living room or kitchen, characteristic of Mr. Scott, with its single deep window seats and floor of East Anglian "pamments;" divided from this room by the staircase, but capable of being thrown into it, at will, is a small parlor 12 feet by 9 feet. There is a good pantry, but the three bedrooms above, being largely in the roof, are necessarily rather small. These cottages are constructed of nine-inch brick work, rough cast, while much of the interior woodwork is of elm.

Many foreigners from Europe have travelled long distances to view these houses, and a few Americans have been seen on the grounds, having heard of the exhibit during their sight-seeing.

The Duke, Mr. J. St. Loe Strachey and others, who are backing the exhibit, think the improvement and cheapening of house-building will have a great effect on the nation. The army and navy will, they believe, have a sturdy agricultural stock to draw from.

What to Do at a Wooden Wedding.

By Mrs. Linda Hull Larned.

THE majority of beginners at the end of five years have settled the question of the home and its requirements and it is a fitting time to celebrate the wooden wedding. By this time they are established in the community as a permanent institution and the beginnings of a family have already appeared—at least it is to be hoped that this is the case.

In sending invitations to their wooden wedding celebration they, of course, have no motive except one of pure social enjoyment, but their relatives and most intimate friends generally hold a utilitarian point of view and take this opportunity to add choice pieces of furniture that they know will be not only welcome but fit in artistically with the other belongings.

But there will be others who are not expected to help in this way and who, if they send anything at all will prefer that it should be some dainty accessory of no particular practical value. And there are still others who will scour the shops in search of something grotesque or funny.

These are the people who will make a success of the affair—those who enter enthusiastically into the spirit of fun—for the happy couple would prefer to have their wedding celebrations jollifications rather than donation parties. Nevertheless, those who receive invitations to weddings or their anniversaries are always confronted with the question; what shall I give?"

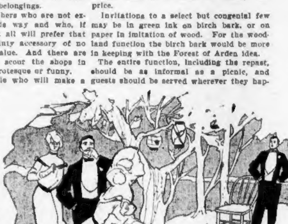
These suggestions, it must be understood, are given as much for those who go to parties as for those who give them, perhaps more, for people would not give them without knowing how, but many, many accept in blundering ignorance of the correct thing to do. So we will help the guests first.

In selecting the useful presents one should consider their fitness and adaptability, and choice pieces of furniture—chairs, tables, etc., should, if possible, match those the recipient already possesses.

A piano, of course, is a suitable gift from a near relative, and so, too, are things less expensive—things for the kitchen, for instance. Those who [illegible]er to give choice bits of no practical value, except the one of remembrance, may select charming bits of burnt wood with floral decorations, or pictures of woodland scenes; a screen, a book rack, baskets in all conceivable shapes and sizes, or growing plants in wooden pails. For the amusing gifts—and these are in the majority—to be passed on to children or to the rummage sale afterwards, there is no limit to variety and price.

Invitations to a select but congenial few may be in green ink on birch bark, or on paper in imitation of wood. For the woodland function the birch bark would be more in keeping with the Forest of Arden idea.

"Men hate to be ridiculed."

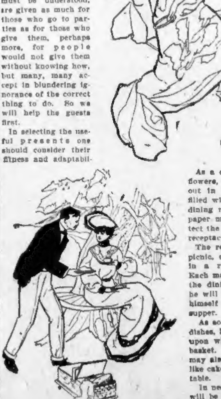


"After supper games could be played."

The entire function, including the repast, should be as informal as a picnic, and guests should be served wherever they happen to seat themselves. There should be a large tree in the woods, from which all the viands are served, and it should be buffet table in the dining room, or around made picturesquely appropriate with its bare wood foundation, wooden adornments and green leaves.

As a centre piece, a log cabin filled with flowers, or a small log with a big hole dug out in upper side. A birch bark canoe filled with flowers is pretty, if the regular dining room table is used, and then green paper mats edged with flowers should protect the table from contact with the wooden receptacles placed upon it.

The repast, even if it be not an outdoor picnic, should be given to each man guest in a ribbon-trimmed, splint-wood basket. Each man will, at a given signal, march to the dining room for his basket, and then he will secure seats in some cozy nook for himself and the lady who is to share his supper.



"He will secure seats in some cozy nook."

As soon as they are seated large wooden dishes, like trays, will be given to each one upon which to spread the contents of the basket. But bouillon and coffee and ices may also be served, and all the accessories, like cakes, bonbons, nuts, etc., from the side table.

In neat wax paper packages in the basket will be found sandwiches, cold turkey, ham or chicken, tiny wooden dishes filled with salad, and wooden spoons and forks. The ice cream may either be served in tiny pails of natural wood, or in wooden shoes. I prefer the pails, and they may be taken home by the guests as souvenirs.

After supper games could be played, and those suitable for the occasion are "Jack Straws," "Devil Among the Tailors," or quoits with wooden rings and pegs which come for a house game. Prizes could be given, and they, of course, should be of wood. Wooden fans, or exquisitely painted burnt wood articles for the ladies, and golf sticks and canes for the men are among the many possibilities.

If our hostess lives in a large city and her expenditures may be unlimited, she will find at the caterer's moulds for ice cream in imitation of a yule log. These are usually made in coffee, caramel or chocolate ice cream and are garnished with leaves of angelica and browned nuts left whole.

To finish the evening's fun, a big washtub filled with sawdust should be brought in and the guests be invited to dig with their wooden spoons and spring clothespins for the fish to be caught in this wooden pond.

These should be all sizes and styles of wooden boxes or baskets tied with ribbon and containing a piece of the original wedding cake, or perhaps, if there is none, a toy of some kind illustrating a personal joke.

Our hostess should not forget that shaving curls may be used to adorn her fair person. Shavings in her hair and around her neck, but it is doubtful if she can induce the partner of her joys and woes to appear in any of these trimmings. Men do so hate to be made objects of ridicule.

No one need hesitate to invite friends, both intimate and the other kind, to any kind of a wooden wedding celebration no matter how absurd the details may be.

There is but little regard given to the conventionalities that govern other social functions, the one aim and object of both hosts and guests being simply to have a jolly good time.

Interesting Scientific Facts About Fruit as a Diet.

By J. Gordon Sharp, M. D.

THE value of the soft fruits as an adjunct to the more solid articles of diet has for long been recognised. The salts which they contain have been regarded as useful in building up the tissues by supplying them in the proper combination required by these tissues, while the succulent and indigestible fibrous material has been recognized as a salutary irritating agent to the large intestine in persons inclined to constipation. So far good, but the succulent fruits possess other properties not so often appreciated but yet as important as those with which we are already so familiar. The first property may be stated as follows:

The organic acids contained in fruit unite with the iron of the more solid foodstuffs to form malates, citrates, etc., and these malates, citrates, etc., are acted upon by the digestive juices low down in the intestines, where the iron becomes soluble and active. The great advantage is that the iron in this form is non-irritating. As is well known, much of the iron of our food is lost as iron because it passes out of the intestine unused, and unused because it is insoluble. The acids of the fruit "fix" the iron contained in the proteid forming organic iron salts which are broken up lower down in the alimentary tract and can be employed by the blood tissue. I know it is denied that the organic preparations of iron are of service in anaemia, but from this view I dissent because I have again and again proved its fallacy.

The second property possessed by many of the succulent fruits depends on the presence of a ferment or ferments. I do not mean the ferment common to all living tissues, animal as well as vegetable, such a ferment as will split up glucosides, but I mean rather a series of ferments analogous to those found in the pancreas. The following experiments undertaken to prove or disprove the presence of digestive ferments will indicate the drift of my argument.

If fresh ripe strawberries are cut into thin slices and spread in double layers over the bottom of a thin glass dish and on the top of this is placed a thin layer of rubbed-up coagulated egg albumen, and on top of this another double layer of sliced strawberry, the albumen is sandwiched between layers of strawberry and so is continually moistened by the juice of the fruit. Digestion slowly takes place at the end of eight hours' exposure at Summer heat.

If ripe cherries are split open and the surface of each cherry is covered with a thin layer of coagulated egg albumen that has been rubbed up into a fine pulp and each cherry is again closed and laid in a thin glass dish and protected from dust and then exposed to Summer heat for eight hours, a considerable degree of digestion is found to have taken place.

If the pulp of fresh cherries be extracted with cold water and filtered, there is obtained a thick fluid containing proteid material and associated with it the ferment of the cherry. To obtain the preparation in a dry state the fluid is poured into great excess of absolute alcohol and set aside for two months, when the proteid becomes slowly coagulated and it can be collected on a filter and dried rapidly at low temperature to avoid destruction of the ferment. I have prepared it in this manner and have found it active at the end of two years' time, and its property of splitting up glucosides could be readily demonstrated.

Orange juice, free from all admixture of rind, has a slight digestive action on coagulated egg white, and it can be proved in the manner I have already mentioned. If amygdalin be added to the fresh juice the [illegible]er almond odor soon develops. The amount of ferment is perhaps greatest when the fruit is at its ripest.

Ripe pears were cut open and the cut surfaces covered with a thin layer of coagulated blood fibrin and then closed again and exposed at Summer heat in a thin glass vessel for eight hours. The clot gradually became softened and finally quite dissolved.

The juice of ripe home-grown apples acts much in the same way, but less powerfully than pear juice. This part of the subject naturally leads to the consideration of tinned fruits, and at once I may say that all tinned fruits are useless as digestives. The prolonged high temperature necessary to their preservation destroys the ferments. On the other hand, baking or stewing fruit does not entirely destroy the ferment unless the heat be very prolonged. A test as to whether or not a cooked fruit is inert is to be found in the presence or absence of the original flavor of the fruit. If a cooked fruit has lost all its flavor then one may say it has lost all its ferment.

To obtain most benefit from the succulent fruits they should be eaten at the end of the chief meal. This is a general rule, to which, however, there are some exceptions. Bananas, for example, perhaps have little digestive activity, and, besides, they are as much a food as a fruit. They may be eaten with any meal, and to many people they are most acceptable when they are cut in thin slices and eaten with bread and butter.

By an intelligent recommendation of the proper use of fruit in our dietary the medical man can do much to counteract the evil influence of those who teach the entire use of fruit as an article of diet. Every medical man now and then comes across patients who have dined for weeks on half a dozen bananas, a pound of strawberries, a pound of uncooked apples, or a pound of grapes or other fruit. Strange to say, it is often the poor creature who is run down who takes to this fruit craze and, as might be expected, the injudicious feeding makes his condition worse. The importance of many of these points I am afraid is not sufficiently appreciated by medical men. Patients nowadays expect us to give them hints not only on what they should eat and what they should avoid, but likewise as to the manner in which their food should be cooked and eaten. We shall do well if we use wisely the new power given into our hands.

CAPTAIN HARDIZAN BY JULES VERNE.

A THRILLING TRAGEDY-ROMANCE of the SAHARA.

(Copyright, 1906, by American-Journal-Examiner.)

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS.

CAPTAIN LEON HARDIZAN'S military expedition to Africa to make a report to the French Government on the scheme to flood a desert portion of the Desert of Sahara and thus turn a waste of sand into a navigable sea had strange experiences soon after its start from the port of Gabes, in Algeria. The first of a series of episodes, made wonderful by inexplicable phenomena, consisted—as told in previous chapters—of the abduction of a French girl, Marie Lauri, by Arabs, under the direction of Djemma, a native priestess endowed with hypnotic power. Beyond that not extraordinary gift, Djemma was a creature so abnormal with unexplained electrical permeation, so seemingly superhuman in mind and body, that it was no wonder her people paid homage to her as to a goddess. We shall see, eventually, the amazing source of this woman's witchery.

Those who read the account of the rescue of Marie Lauri from Hadjar's band of nomads, by her lover, Captain Hardizan, and his troop of fifty cavalrymen, know that Djemma remained behind her son's fleeing party and purposely became a prisoner to the French.

So the French expedition went on its way to the oasis of Zenfig, taking along Djemma as a prisoner and Marie as a guest. To their surprise they found the French engineering party gone and their beginnings of the canal filled in and the machinery broken. This destruction had been wrought by Djemma's fanatical tribe of Touaregs who had been taught by her and her son Hadjar [illegible] that the proposed inland sea meant not only the obliteration of [illegible] but the Arab hordes of bandits as well. The old witch Djemma managed to lure the main force of the troops away in a vain search for the canal workers whom they had failed to find at the oasis of Zenfig. Under Lieutenant Villette the troopers set out for Gizeb, twenty miles distant, under guidance of a treacherous Arab. They found no traces of the native workers or the French supervisors, and in returning to Captain Hardizan's camp were caught in a desert simoon of great violence.

The same storm threatened to overwhelm the camp, and Hardizan and his small party were easily surprised and captured by a force of Arabs under Hadjar and Sohar, Djemma's two sons. All are made [illegible] terrible three days' journey across the hot sands to [illegible] where they are imprisoned in a ruined Touareg fortress and left without food. [illegible] Sohar, the younger son, rescues Marie from the cruelty of his elder brother and proves to have fallen in love with the girl.

"The light of a lantern suddenly flashed upon the fugitives, and there, barring the way, stood Djemma with two stalwart ruffians."

CHAPTER XI.

Marie Rescued from a Shocking Fate.

WHILE his unfortunate companions fell asleep one after another in the wretched prison where Djemma, the witch, had left them Captain Hardizan, unconscious of his fatigue, restlessly paced back and forth in the old castle. From time to time he stood watching his sleeping companions and then crept softly over to the cell where Marie still slept. He was alive to the necessity of doing something, anything; inaction seemed to him impossible. There in the centre of the court stood the minaret, lifting its top above the surrounding wall. From it he might survey the oasis. It was so broken that its interior was choked. After many efforts, and risking his neck as many times, he climbed the [illegible] stairs and reached the upper edge of the structure, from which the cupola was lacking.

From that point he peered through the embrasures, and, secure from being seen, viewed the panorama on which a quarter moon shone fitfully from a somewhat clouded sky. It seemed that the castle was not guarded from without. What was the use? The walls were many feet high and the door could not be forced. Manifestly it was impossible to escape by climbing without a ladder. Beyond the castle extended the village among the trees of the oasis, which was about four kilometres across. The dwellings gleamed white amid the dark verdure. Judging by the superior size of one of them, the ornamentation of its walls and the number of standards fluttering at its entrance, he rightly concluded it was Hadjar's house.

Later Hardizan heard the closing of a door in the castle and the sound brought his eyes back from Hadjar's dwelling to the exterior of his own prison. The door, whose shutting had made a slight noise, was not within his range of vision, but he soon saw the person who had emerged and who now came into his view. That person was Djemma. She stopped and looked at the sky long and fixedly, as though for weather signs. She walked rapidly to her son's house, entered it, and within five minutes came out with him.

If the captain could have heard their conversation as they walked together toward the castle, he would have been enlightened amazingly.

"I shall do it to-night," said Djemma.

"Why to-night?" Hadjar asked.

"Because all things are favorable. Look at me, my son. An hour ago I was weak—now I am strong. Absence from the Fire of Life for an unusually long period had exhausted the power which I derive from it. I have just come from it—it is burning fiercely—it cries for the sacrifice. Yes, Hadjar, my time has come."

"Then you would—now—"

"I would entrance this Marie Lauri as I have done before and can do again. Once under my spell, she will do my will willingly. She shall follow me from her cell to the cavern below the altar, and there stand in the Fire of Life."

"The Fire of Death to her!"

"But the Fire of Life for me. This will be exactly the sacrifice that Maradah told me of—that I told you of."

Hadjar, savage fanatic though he was, shuddered at the thought, and said: "It is a fearful thing, mother, to destroy this young girl like that."

There was fierceness in Djemma's retort. "What is the use of a few years to her compared to the gain of a hundred for me to live?"

They made their way to the iron-bound door of the prison court, and Hadjar unlocked it so noiselessly that Hardizan—and, of course, the sleeping prisoners—did not hear it.

"Now, leave me, Hadjar," the priestess commanded. "What I have to do I can do best alone."

He obeyed, and she stealthily entered the yard, unseen by the captain. She went to the door of the room where the other Frenchmen were sleeping the sleep of fatigue, and made sure that they had not been aroused, but she did not miss Hardizan from among them. Next, she stole cautiously to Marie Lauri's room and listened. The girl was breathing with the regularity of peaceful slumber. Having assured herself of that, the woman entered and approached the couch.

Now, it was a new experiment that Djemma was about to undertake. She knew that Marie was sensitively responsive to her control; that from a waking state she could make her pass into a trance; but could she throw this spell upon her when she was asleep? Yet it would not do to awaken her, for surely she would cry out at sight of her visitor and so alarm her companions. Djemma faced the east for a moment in silent prayer to Allah—for it was to him, as a miraculous gift, that she ascribed the power which science knows as hypnotism. Then she turned to the recumbent girl and began to pass her hands before her face.

Closer and closer the yellow palms came to the white brow of Marie, until at length they touched it lightly at each stroke. Soon the girl opened her eyes and the woman gazed into them. The charm was potent—the spell was wrought—the will of the victim was stolen from her—she was utterly obedient to her entrancer.

"Get up and follow me," Djemma murmured.

Marie did so, silently, unconsciously. In that manner they passed out of the cell into the yard—the woman walking backward, the girl following closely, and the eyes of each fixed on the other's, like a serpent's and a dove's.

Such was the sight which dumfounded Captain Hardizan as he emerged from the minaret. And it was the more weird by reason of an electrical phenomenon with which the reader is already acquainted. Djemma's face radiated a faint glow; so did her exposed hands and arms; and sparks flew from her to the girl.

The captain sprang forward, threw one arm around his sweetheart and with a swing of the other flung the sorceress aside. At the contact with Djemma he felt a shock as from a galvanic battery.

"You hellfire fiend," he cried, "what deviltry is this?"

The spell was broken. Marie awoke in the arms of her lover. Of what had happened she did not retain so much as the dim recollection of a dream.

Djemma growled savagely, like a wolf from which a lamb had been taken. She strode out of the court and locked the door behind her.

"Merciful Heaven!" cried Captain Hardizan, "it is Marie!"

CHAPTER XII.

A Most Unexpected Friend.

CAPTAIN HARDIZAN was hardly less dazed than Marie Lauri by Djemma's frustrated exploit. What did it mean? Why had the weird woman undertaken, by mesmeric entrancement, to lead the girl from the cell to—where? And for what purpose? They discussed it, while, with his firm hands clasping her trembling ones, they sat on the bench until dawn faintly streaked the sky. Nothing would have been gained by disturbing their companions' sleep. Now they awoke of themselves.

Hardizan and Marie went aside with de Schaller and told him of Djemma's visit and strange conduct. The engineer had no guesses to make. The hypnotic faculty of the Arab woman they had known; also, the electrical force which at times she manifested; but the mystery of the creature—as the reader by this time understands it—was far and away beyond their wildest surmise. They concluded that, for the present, they would say nothing about it to the men, whose courage it might affect for the worse rather than the better.

Sergeant Pistache's first waking concern was about the question of breakfast. An hour later it was settled to his satisfaction by the entrance of half a dozen Touaregs with cakes, cold meat and dates enough to last the party for a day. The Arabs brought also, some pitchers of water drawn from the stream that flowed through the oasis.

Pistache's topic for chatter with his comrades was the missing dog, Cut-throat. What had become of the faithful brute?

"I wish we had him here," said Pistache.

"What could he do for us?" asked Trooper Francois.

"Well, you never can tell," the Sergeant responded: "dogs have an instinct that we haven't. It's true that, as we can't get out of this confounded court, he couldn't either. But I'd like to share my breakfast with Cut-throat, anyway."

The forenoon passed, and half the afternoon was gone before anything happened to break the monotony of suspense. The captain and the engineer mounted to the top of the minaret to make an observation. They saw at once that the village was animated. The houses were emptying one by one, and natives were arriving from across the desert. The public square was soon crowded by several hundred Touaregs. Soon Djemma, accompanied by her sons, Hadjar and Sohar, were seen to go to the place of assemblage and to be received with acclaim. Then Hadjar addressed his people. For an hour they listened attentively, except for outbreaks of applause.

"I think this is a meeting for the purpose of opposition to our French scheme of turning a section of Sahara into an inland sea," said the engineer. "Hadjar is rousing his horde to further destruction of the canal."

"May it not be," and Hardizan glanced down the broken stairs to see that no other of his party was within hearing, "that the tribe has been called together to witness a massacre? Oh, I know it isn't wise to dread more than we have to, but there is Marie—what is in store for Marie?"

The conjecture of De Schaller was correct. The Touareg chief had convoked his tribesmen to declare renewed opposition to the French sea and canal project, and they had responded with enthusiasm to his appeal. They had destroyed the works at Zenfig during his imprisonment at Gabes, as we have seen, and now they promised heartily to follow his personal leadership in an onslaught whenever operations should be resumed by the foreigners.

Hardizan and De Schaller descended the minaret and joined their comrades. They had learned nothing except that Hadjar had collected several hundreds of fighting men. There was nothing to do but await the outcome, and in what anxiety! From one minute to the next it seemed as though the door would open to admit the Arab chief and his horde. If he chose to drag them away to be put to death they could make no resistance. And if it were not today, might it not be to-morrow?

At the wane of the torturing day the prisoners heard the door unlocked, saw it swing open a little way, and Sohar, the second son of Djemma, slipped in alone. He asked to speak with Captain Hardizan privately. He said hurriedly, and with anxious glances toward the entrance: "Something dreadful is ready to be done to Marie Lauri. I don't know what it is, except that the intention is to kill her as a sacrifice. As you know, I have forfeited my mother's and brother's confidence since that affair on the way from Zenfig. They don't trust me. They would slay me if they knew what I am doing now. Marie can be saved. I can do it."

"Why should I trust you any more than they do?" the captain asked.

"Because you know how I love the French maiden. And you cannot do else than entrust her to me. My mother has declared that she shall die to-night."

So far as that assertion went the captain did not question the Arab's truthfulness.

"I am ready to take her away," said Sohar.

"Take her away—you? Where? To what?"

"Listen, sahib. Your troop under Lieutenant Vilette—which my mother sent away on a pretext so that Marie might be left defenceless—has doubtless started ere this to rescue you. But they are only fifty, while the Touaregs are ten times as many. They will be wiped out. Now, as soon as night falls, I will steal away with Marie and escape with her from this oasis. I will take her toward Zenfig till I encounter Vilette and your troop, to whom I will deliver her safe and sound. I can give you but a few minutes to decide. A cap waved from the minaret will mean that I am to come for her. The absence of that signal will tell me that you have decided on the certainty of death for her here against my solemn vow to take her to safety."

Sohar slipped out as quietly as he had slipped in.

Captain Hardizan consulted with De Schaller first; and then they informed Marie of Sohar's proposal.

"I will remain with you, Leon," she said. "I will share your fate."

Then he revealed to her the full extent of her peril so far as he knew it from Sohar—that Djemma meant to put her to death for some superstitious purpose. She turned white and would have fallen if he had not caught her. She tried to be brave, but her strength gave out.

"If we could have confidence in Sohar," said Hardizan.

"He loves me, that is sure," and she spoke from her woman's intuition.

"And that would be poor security for your person in his hands," the captain groaned.

The engineer, who had been silent, now spoke. "Will you let me decide what shall be done?"

"Yes," said the distracted lover.

"Yes," assented the fainting sweetheart.

CHAPTER XIII.

"Merciful Heaven! It Is Marie."

AS soon as evening had darkened the castle, Sohar came into the yard again.

"Are you ready?" he said to Marie, bowing respectfully.

"She is ready," De Schaller answered for her. "But I make one condition. You are to be unarmed and she is to have a dagger."

"That is agreed," the Arab replied.

"And that dagger must be tipped with your Saharan poison of enerta—that deadly essence which, if a man be but scratched with such a blade, he will die before he has had time to breath twice again."

"That is agreed," said the Arab. "I will bring it within ten minutes. We have no time to lose."

When he returned he had a sheathed stiletto in one hand and a bird in the other.

"How are we to know this is really poisoned?" the engineer asked.

For answer, Sohar uncovered the blade and pricked the bird with its point. Almost instantly the bird fluttered, stiffened and was dead. Then the Arab carefully sheathed the dagger and handed it to Marie, to whom de Schaller said: "If this man gives any sign of treachery, strike him down before he can harm you." Then he searched him to see if he carried any weapon and found none. "If he arms himself, that will be a signal for you to protect yourself. Watch him closely till he delivers you to our friends."

Marie and Hardizan yielded without protest the obedience to the engineer which they had pledged. Adieus were spoken and the lovers parted at the doorway, she to go away with the Arab and he to distract himself with anxiety as soon as she was gone.

Sohar was sincere. His unreasonable love of Marie had led him to hazard his life for her. And he lost!

Two fleet horses had been hidden for him at the edge of the oasis. But he never got to them. In the unused passage through which he started through the castle with his charge groping his way in darkness the light of a lantern was suddenly flashed upon the fugitives. And there, barring the way, stood Djemma with two stalwart ruffians.

Not a word was spoken. The tragedy of an instant was played in awful pantomime. Marie had held the dagger in one hand while Sohar led her by the other. Now in her terror she drew it from its sheath to fight against recapture. Djemma knew at a glance that it was a poisoned weapon. She seized it away from the girl, turned upon her son, stabbed him, and he fell lifeless before her.

The prisoners could not know that Marie and Sohar had not got out of the castle. All but Hardizan retreated to their room and lay down on the alfa. The captain, although he had slept less than any one else, remained awake in the court. An hour later he heard a sound without. Was Hadjar coming? He watched the door, but it did not open. He listened again. The noise was not of footsteps, but a sad, muffled whining. A dog was outside the wall. A low bark was too familiar to be mistaken. The dog was Cut-throat.

"Yes, we're here, Cut-throat," the captain answered to the call. "Ah, if you could understand—if you could go to the troop and report!"

Then he awakened the others. But what was there for them to do? And how could the dog be of any service to them?

Cut-throat himself answered that question. He had by keen scent located his friends. He had discovered a soft spot of earth under the wall. He was digging there with might and main. The prisoners encouraged him in low voices and he responded with [illegible] yelps of delight. And while the dog with his paws [illegible] the men dug with their hands at the base of the wall on their side. In half an hour the dog was among them. Rapidly and noiselessly they enlarged the crevice until it was large enough to crawl through. One after another they made the passage and found themselves restrained from freedom by nothing more than a wall so broken down that the dog had leaped over it in making his way to them.

But it was one thing, as they well knew, to get out of the castle and quite another to get away from the oasis. They stopped in the shadow of a tree to plan what to do. Captain Hardizan said that, without horses they would find it hard to make their way across the desert. Might they not steal some from the Arab stables?

"Thank God, Marie is safe away," he exclaimed.

By chance, as his eyes swept the clouded sky hopefully for signs of a storm which might facilitate their flight, he fixed his gaze appalled on the main tower of the castle. [illegible] On the top of the tower stood a woman in a white robe. Was it Djemma in the raiment of a priestess? No. The moon, coming out from a cloud, threw a light on the figure.

"Children's Frock Patterns,"
P. O. Box 260,
New York City

Each pattern ordered, together with full instructions for making, will be forwarded to you postpaid by return of mail.

The design on the right, No. 184—2879, shows excellent style and individuality in the collar sloping to the front waist line in bretelle effect, disclosing the front of the waist, which may be finished after the manner of a fancy tucker or chemisette. The effectiveness is increased by having the bretelles outlined by an embroidered design. The sleeves have a double puff ending in a close-fitting cuff. The skirt is laid in box plaits all around, stitched a short distance to form a very shallow yoke. This develops well in linen, madras, marseilles, serge or challis. For medium size the pattern requires 4¼ yards of material 36 inches wide. This frock comes in five sizes, from 6 to 14 years.

The other design shown, No. 185—2913, is for a frock for a girl from ½ to 6 years of age. It is extremely simple, as gowns for such little people must be. A flowered dimity develops prettily in this dress as well as white mull or lawn. Bands of insertion trim the skirt and a broad ruffle of lace or embroidery finishes the yoke. The dress may be made high neck for general wear or in low, round neck for nice wear. Challis or serge may also be used in developing this frock. The medium size requires 2¾ yards of 36-inch material. The pattern is in five sizes, ½, 1, 2, 4 and 6 years.

THE CUT-OUT STORY OF CINDERELLA

Being an Account of How Cinderella's Good Fairy Godmother Enabled Her to Go to the Prince's Grand Ball.

WE left Cinderella last week wondering however she was to go to the Prince's grand ball without a carriage and with nothing finer to wear than a ragged gown and wornout shoes.

Cinderella's fairy godmother was the right sort of fairy godmother to have. She said that Cinderella should go to the ball.

"Hey, there, presto change!" she said, waving her wand.

Instantly Cinderella's ragged dress changed into a most beautiful ball gown with diamonds and all the most lovely trimmings and laces imaginable. Through the fairy's magic power Cinderella's face and hands became clean, her hair dressed in the most approved style and she was clothed from head to feet as magnificently as the most fashionable leader in Mrs. Astor's "400" could desire.

And on her feet were the most dainty little glass slippers you ever saw.

"Hey, there, presto change!" commanded the fairy again, with another wave of her magic wand.

Then a very funny thing happened. A pumpkin out of which Cinderella had intended to make pies for to-morrow changed into a beautiful coach and some mice and doves playing around the kitchen were suddenly transformed into horses, footmen and a driver for the coach. In no time the horses were harnessed to the coach. The coachman sprang on the box and one of the footmen closed the coach door after Cinderella had jumped in.

"Have a good time at the ball, Cinderella," said the fairy as the coach started to the palace where the ball was being held, "but be sure to leave for home before 12 o'clock."

POLITICS & ART

SCIENCE · LITERATURE ·

BOSTON AMERICAN, SUNDAY, AUGUST 27, 1905.

THE POWER OF SILENCE.

THE difficulty with many of us is that we talk too much and think too little.

Back of speech, if it is to be of value, THOUGHT must stand.

We are a talking nation. With each nationality absorbed, the American people seem to have added that nationality's gift of talk.

We are a nation of speech-makers, or self-imagined orators.

Our political campaigns are campaigns of talk. Talk is our eternal occupation on the cars, at home, in clubs—everywhere. And if we stop talking by chance we rush off to meetings or theatres to hear others talk.

Our climate, our system of competition, our original freedom from established precedents, have made of us a restless, nervous, self-tiring people.

Our men are old, bald, gray and TALKING HARD, when they should still be young and in their prime.

If American men or women or children call upon each other, all talk incessantly. Perpetual talk, however aimless, is considered the most important social duty. And if at table the flow of chatter stops for a moment, someone feels bound to apologize.

Human beings seem to look upon themselves as the inhabitants of some great parrot house—if the noise stops there must be something the matter with the birds.

* * *

It is not necessary to say that talk—the interpreter of the mind—is man's most valuable physical accomplishment. Through speech and writing we hand down knowledge from generation to generation. Our development from the primitive stage would have been impossible without speech.

But with us Americans talk needs no defence.

It is the gift of silence that our people lack. Not one man in a thousand realizes that silent thought is absolutely essential to the growth of the mind. We are like babies that cry if left to themselves for a few moments. Their little brains CANNOT work, and solitude frightens them. The nation of perpetual talkers is a race of grown up babies used to and fond of noise, but very little accustomed to steady thinking.

Any one of us is perfectly capable of talking steadily for hours at a stretch about nothing in particular.

Did you ever realize how hard it is to THINK CONSECUTIVELY EVEN FOR THREE MINUTES?

Pick out your subject of thought now—for instance, make up your mind to think on the problem of INFINITE SPACE, time and matter. Try to formulate IN YOUR OWN THOUGHT some conception of the vastness of the Universe.

Just put down this newspaper, and see if you can THINK STEADILY FOR THREE MINUTES ABOUT ANY ONE THING.

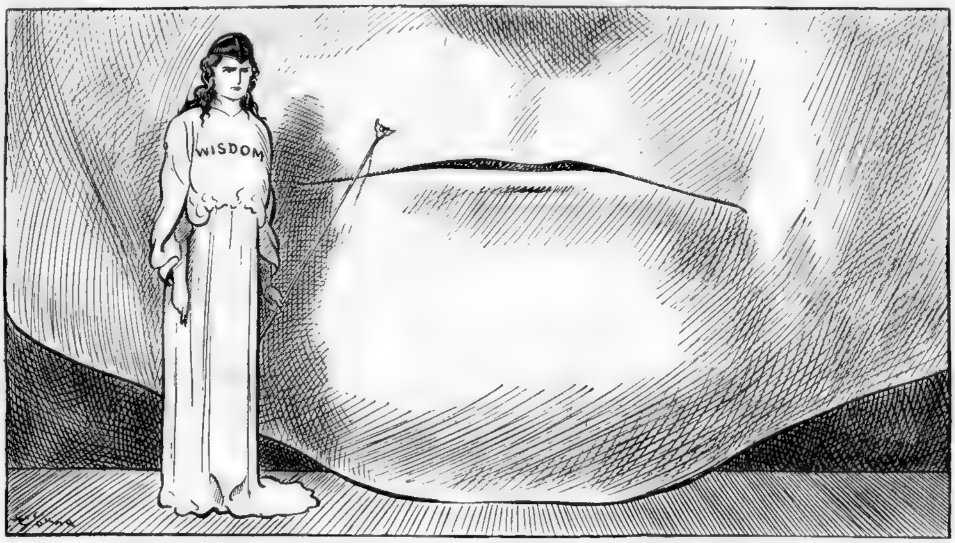
YOU, individually, may succeed. But there is not one man in a thousand capable of keeping his thought steadily upon one subject, even for a few minutes at a time. It will wander off and give up the self-imposed task.

There is not a young (or old) man or woman that would not be better off for a few hours of solitude and silence each day—and a few days of solitary thought each year or oftener.

The success of the country boy is based largely on the fact that he IS FORCED TO KEEP HIMSELF COMPANY, and thought—if he have any brain at all—is forced upon him.

Newton, ALONE AND THINKING, in the moonlight saw the apple fall. And in his mind there started THE THOUGHT that has immortalized his name and conferred great benefit upon the human race and glory upon the intellect of man.

Had he been at that time in a crowd, chattering and gossiping, he might have picked up the apple to eat it—talking between bites. But he could not have done the concentrated thinking which made him ask WHY THE MOON DID NOT FALL AS THAT APPLE HAD FALLEN, and that led to the discovery of the law of gravitation.



"Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; Keep the door of my lips."—Psalms, cxli., 3.

* * *

We shall ask you to read a few lines on this subject by Carlyle, himself a great SILENT thinker. The quotation is taken from the third chapter of the third book of Sartor Resartus, the chapter on "Symbols." Should you read the entire work slowly, carefully and in solitude, you would find a rich reward in the mental happiness and excitement produced by the thought-producing character of the work.

Sartor Resartus can be bought for a trifle at any book store, and while it is less easy to read that book than to read this trashy editorial, or listen to some comic opera song, the intelligent reading of it will add value to your whole life.

Here is the quotation:

> "Silence and secrecy! Altars might still be raised to them (were this an altar-building time) for Universal worship.
>
> "Silence is the element in which great things fashion themselves together; that at length they may emerge, full-formed and majestic, into the daylight of Life, which they are thenceforth to rule.
>
> "Not William the Silent only, but all the considerable men I have known, and the most undiplomatic and unstrategic of these, forbore to babble of what they were creating and projecting.
>
> "Nay, in thy own mean perplexities, do thou thyself but HOLD THY TONGUE FOR ONE DAY: On the morrow, how much clearer are thy purposes and duties; what wreck and rubbish have those mute workmen within thee swept away, when intrusive noises were shut out.
>
> "Speech is too often not, as the Frenchman defined it, the art of concealing Thought; but of quite suspending Thought, so that there is none to conceal.
>
> "Speech, too, is great, but not the greatest. As the Swiss inscription says: Sprechen ist silbern, Schweigen ist golden (Speech is silvern, Silence is golden), or, as I might rather express it: Speech is of Time, Silence is of Eternity.
>
> "Bees will not work except in darkness; Thought will not work except in silence."

* * *

There are two kinds of silence, PASSIVE and ACTIVE silence.

And the type of ACTIVE silence may be seen in one of those studies of Napoleon, digging up silently OUT OF HIS OWN DEEP MIND the solution of his world problems.

The silence that is a mere cessation of noise is as useless as the noise itself.

The silence that makes growth is that of concentrated thought or at least of an open, receptive, searching mind, contemplating the phenomena of the material and spiritual world in search of truth.

* * *

There was a wise man that took care of dogs. All those that were ill he cured in one way.

He put the sick dog in a barrel with a supply of water for twenty-four hours—and the dog was all right. Foolish, careless eating had made him sick. Water, solitude and rest made him well again.

Our tired, sick minds need the cure of solitude. We are surfeited with talk, chatter, noise, aimless gossip. Many of us could cure our minds as the wise man cured his dogs.

In any of our big business houses you can tell almost at once who the USEFUL man is, who the COMING man is. Nine times out of ten he is THE SILENT MAN.

TRY silence for a while. See how much useless talk you can eliminate from your life. Don't seize every opportunity to babble aimlessly. Let your tongue rest and YOUR MIND WORK.

It is not possible, perhaps, to get in our civilization the twenty-four hours of solitude and silence every week that would do us all so much good.

We have little time to ourselves as a people little time not needed for sleep or for work. And what little time we own we naturally devote to amusing ourselves—and talking or listening to talk is the universal national amusement. Shop girls gather in groups, TALKING. Lads gather on street corners, TALKING.

Even in libraries we must put up signs, "No LOUD Talking."

And in factories and in prisons the disagreeable punishment is that same order, "No talking."

* * *

Where does the USEFULNESS of silence come in?

You know that success comes from PLANNING, from intelligent thinking—not from aimless talking.

If you wanted to win a race, you would PRACTICE running.

If you intended to fight a duel you would PRACTICE fencing—or firing a pistol.

The task that makes every one of us succeed is that of THINKING, and not one of us knows enough to PRACTICE THOUGHT.

It has been proved over and over that the mind can be developed to an unlimited degree BY WORK.

Our muscles can be brought up to a certain proficiency only. And at a relatively early age there is physical retrogression.

But the development of the mind goes on as long as health lasts. And the man who trains his mind—who thinks while others chatter—is steadily growing, steadily adding to his chances of success.

* * *

How does the silent man impress YOU?

Which do you respect the more, the man grave, talking when he has something to say, courteous but reserved, apparently occupied with thought, or the chatterer from whom escape is difficult?

Why, there are actually many that have achieved moderate success by a mere PRETENSE of solemn silence—how much real success must there be in genuine development of the mind and its powers through silent thought?

Talk without meaning is a habit hard to overcome. It is as difficult a vice to fight as the vice of lying and bragging—both born of the crazy love of chatter.

But the talking habit can be overcome gradually. Think ahead a little, and as the flow of words is about to come, ask yourself if it is worth while, and stop it.

Listen to others, and listen to your own thought. Work things over and over in your own mind. When you need advice or encouragement, seek some friend with whom you can discuss matters seriously and briefly. Put up on the wall of your bedroom or office that quotation from Carlyle, and below it paste this one:

> "Silence, the great Empire of Silence, higher than the stars, deeper than the Kingdom of Death!—Silence and the great Silent men!—Scattered here and there, each in his department; Silently thinking, silently working; whom no morning newspaper makes mention of. They are the salt of the earth. A COUNTRY THAT HAS NONE OF THESE IS IN A VERY BAD WAY. Like a forest which has no ROOTS, which had all turned to leaves and boughs; which must soon wither and be no forest."

The nation that has no silent, thinking men is in a bad way.

And the INDIVIDUAL that has no silent, thinking DAYS and HOURS is in a bad way also.

The chatterbox is indeed like a tree without roots.

* * *

A favorite text of that hero and martyr to his own free thought, Giordano Bruno, was the seventh verse of the Fifty-fifth Psalm, "Lo, then would I wander far off, and remain in the wilderness."

Solitude, the possibility of tranquil thought, according to this pious man, enabled human beings to enjoy a foretaste of the Heavenly life.

Get any one of your Italian friends to translate those few words in Italian preceding the Latin text, and it will at once occur to him that the great Dante is history's best proof of the value of solitude and silence.

But turned adrift by an ungrateful people, forced into solitude, with no companions but his thoughts, he wrote his divine comedy that has outlasted centuries.

* * *

Talk less, think more.

Try to be alone sometimes. Take the development of your own mind more seriously than the chatter of the idle—then you may grow to be something better than a parrot that CAN be taught to talk, but CANNOT be made to think.

The Spring of Happiness

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

SECRET THOUGHTS

I HOLD it true that thoughts are things
Endowed with bodies, breath and wings,
And that we send them forth to fill
The world with good results or ill.

That which we call our secret thought
Speeds to the earth's remotest spot
And leaves its blessings or its woes
Like tracks behind it as it goes.

It is God's law. Remember it
In your still chamber as you sit
With thoughts you would not dare have known
And yet make comrades, when alone.

These thoughts have life; and they will fly
And leave their impress by and by,
Like some marsh breeze whose poisoned breath
Breathes into homes its fevered breath.

And after you have quite forgot
Or all outgrown some vanished thought,
Back to your mind, to make its home,
A dove, or rave, it will come.

Then let your secret thoughts be fair;
They have a vital part and share
In shaping worlds and moulding fate,
God's system is so intricate.

SOME months ago the editor of Suggestion asked me to answer the following questions

I take pleasure in giving my reply through the columns of the AMERICAN

1. What is happiness?

2. Is happiness within the reach of the average person?

3. Is happiness desirable?

4. If happiness were possible would not a great incentive to human endeavor be removed?

5. What is the chief aim of life?

Happiness, to my thinking, is the state of mind which enables us to be grateful for the boon of life, and to rejoice with the rising of each sun that another day has dawned for our use.

Happiness is within the reach of every individual who is willing to develop his higher qualities and to control his lower and more selfish nature. Not until he realizes that this is the foundation of happiness, however, can we hope for this effort on the part of the average human being. The great majority of people imagine happiness means possession of whatever the human heart craves, or the human mind desires

A very little observation will prove to the most casual thinker how erroneous is that conception of the word

Our multimillionaires are in possession of whatever they desire, but it would be unwise to point to any one as a happy man

The man who makes a fortune by the rise of stocks is happy for a day; the warrior who receives a decoration for bravery and the scholar who carries away the honors of his class are happy

But these are all passing conditions, not settled states of mind, and they cannot be called happiness absolute

Real happiness must rest on the foundation of UNSELFISHNESS. It must spring from the consciousness of USEFULNESS, and it must be one with Faith It must forget its own goal in helping others to find theirs. Only this kind of happiness is desirable

The happiness which means gratified ambition and appetites is not a high and noble aim for any soul to seek And gratified ambitions and satisfied appetites do not result in happiness, but in satiety and discontent. If such happiness were possible, then, indeed a great incentive to human endeavor would be removed; for it is the ceaseless striving toward other goals than the one achieved which spurs men on to new effort The chief aim of life is regarded by thousands of people as the attainment of happiness—personal gratifications. The chief aim of life, intended by the GREAT CREATOR, is the perfecting of CHARACTER, the bringing out of the God within. The moment a human being grasps this fact he is on the road to Happiness For whatever sorrowful experience comes to him he will turn it toward SELF DEVELOPMENT and find his happiness in the knowledge that he is working toward SELF COMPLETION

Only when a man knows that he can never be happy in doing one act or harboring one thought which can lower him mentally or morally, or can mar the life of another, is he on the right road to real happiness. Wealth, so eagerly and madly pursued by the majority of men, has little to do with happiness.

Idleness is an absolute foe of happiness.

No idle man or woman has any comprehension of the word. Work, regarded by many as the CURSE sent upon man for sin, is instead God's highway to the hills of HAPPINESS.

Not drudgery, but blessed Employment, which brings all the activities into play and gives a zest to recreation

Wealth, Fame, Power, Success, Position, Beauty, all of these are incapable of producing Happiness unless the soul is set toward the heights of God and the heart filled with the attributes of the CHRIST—love and sympathy

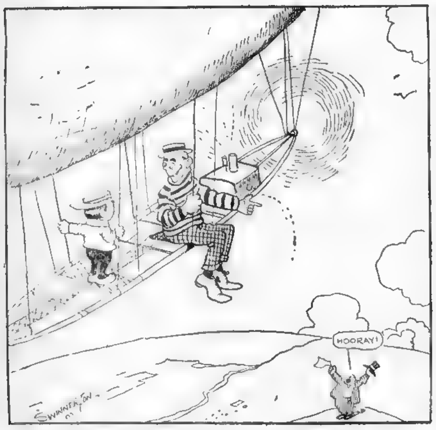
Happiness would be impossible were any one being left alone on earth; and just to the degree that a soul is separated from the rest of humanity by selfishness and lack of universal sympathy, so is that soul incapable of enjoying happiness, while still pursuing it. Just in the measure we feel near to our kind and eager to be of use are we augmenting our chances for happiness on earth.

Only he who finds such happiness on earth can expect to find it in Heaven. For Happiness is a mental state and can be fashioned by our thoughts. The approach to Heaven is through the pathway of happiness. The approach to happiness lies in Love, Trust and Service—Love for the Universe, Trust in God and Service to Humanity

And this leads to the happiness which is immortal. The happiness "within the reach of all"—the happiness which is "desirable," and the happiness which is "the chief aim of life"

Bobbie in the Airship

By William F. Kirk



That is the man that staiks me, sed the inventor."

LAST week i got a chance to go up in the new airship with the man that invented it, we started & left a fat man standing on the ground, waiving at us. who is that? i asked him, & why doant you taik him along. That is the man that staiks me, sed the inventor, he is the angel & he mite fall overbored & then i wud be up agenst it. never lose yure angel, whatever happens to you that dident maik me feel any too good, beekaus i have herd that inventors was all kinder crazy at times & thare we was, all alone together i was hoaping to myself that he wasent that way, but my hoap didont last long Now he sed, we are up in the air over New York, you can tell me all you know about Broadway while we are down low, & after we git up a ways i will tell you all about the Milky Way, that Broadway of the Hevvens. that sounded pritty good, the Broadway of the Hevvens, but thare was a funny look in the man's eyes i didont like. I sed Mercy we aint going that high are we & he sed Lots hiyher than that, we are going so high, he sed, that the stars will be between us & the earth'

I guess you are joaking, I sed. Then he got mad & sed Young man, I nevver joak if you doant want to go any higher you can git a transfer & drop off here. When i herd that i toald him he cud go as high as he liked & i wud nevver desert the ship, even if it had been burning I think i wud have stood on the burning deck quite a while befoar ducking

I am glad you caim along, he sed, beekaus i can use you for ballast boy. What is ballast boy, I asked him. Why, he sed, a ballast boy has got a snap, all he has to do is to set first on one rail of the ship & then on the other & let his feet hang over, that keeps the ship from tipping If yure hed is heavier than yure feet, he sed, & you maik better ballast that way, you must hang over the side of the rail by yure toes

Indeed, i toald him, my head is vary lite, my feet is 3 times as solid as my hed, then i showed him my feet & he seemed to agree with me all rite & i was glad of that

As we stailed over the city i showed him sum of the sites i knew. i showed him the Flatiron bilding & sum Weber chorus girls & Mister Jerome smoaking a cigaret & the Metropole on a busy nite & the office whare i work, but we kept gitting higher up all the time & the sites kept gitting littler & littler till all we cud see was Mister Jerome's head & chest, then even that faided from our view

I will now explain my masheen to you, he sed, it is worked with propellers fore & aft, the inclined plane being shunted two & fro by virtue of the centrifugal foarce which is super indused by the grate velosity of the jigger in its rotary moshun toward the dew-dad while he was telling me this i was looking at him all the time, so he cudent git me by surprise, & the first think i knew we was rite near a funny looking wurld. this is Mars sed the inventor, we will git off here & stock up for our return trip. I sed maybe i better stay in & hold the ship but he sed No, git out with me.

Thare was a lot of peeple standing at a depot neer us, waiting for a trane to cum in Thay was vary funny looking peeple, much bigger than our peeple on earth & much smarter, too. Thay seemed to know all that was going on in the United States & one of them caim up to me & sed Are you from the city of New York & I sed yes & he sed Well i see Cincinnati won another gaim yesterday but I guess the Giants have got the pennant cinched!

Mirandy on the Stenographer

By Dorothy Dix

"DESE sho' is interestin' times," observed Mirandy, thoughtfully "and I tell you I suttenly is glad dat I sent Ma'y Jane off to dat cemetery whar she learned to read right free handed offen de book des as nachul as life Yassum, eddication is a powerful good thing to have in de fambly

"Now, befo' Ma'y Jane learned how to read we used to set up of a night des as dull as ditch water—me a patchin' Ike's britches, an' Ike a pretendin' to nod in his cheer whilst he kept one eye on me to see if there was a good chanst to sneak off to a crap game, an' de chillun doin' de best dey could to liven things up by pullin' each other's hair an' sickin' de dog on to de cat

"Things ain't like dat wid us no mo' Nawm, the higher eddication done change all dat Now des as soon as de supper dishes is cleaned up—an' I is in such a hurry I des gives um a lick an' a promise—all of us gathers about de evening lamp whilst Ma'y Jane reads outen' de paper what de stenographer has been doin'

"My land, but hit sholy is exciting Sometimes she's done conjured a man ontil he's plumb clean forgot he had any fambly. Sometimes she's egone got hurt ridin' in a mobile in one of dese here department hotels an' drinkin' champagne whilst her employer's wife and chillen is inchin' and pinchin' in de suburbs an' are glad to get buttermilk.

"Sometimes she's marryin' de man she's hired to ef he's single, or elopin' wid him an' de cash drawer if he's married, or suin' him for breach of promise ef he's one of de case-hardened ole bachelors, or she turns up wid a will an' a secret marriage on his acceptance, but she always a-doin' somethin', and we sho' would be lonesome at our house if we missed her picture outa de paper.

"An' dat ain't all. Bimeby de wife chips into de game wid a pistol or a butcher knife, or a bottle of acid, an' you better believe me dat things begin to hum long 'bout den

"Yas suh, hit suttenly is entertainin' readin' when hit gets to the place whar de wife starts out on de warpath an' snatches de pearl necklace often de stenographer an' bats her over de head wid an' umbrella des as the lady what slings the pothooks an' de woman's husband—what said he was called sudden to Squeedunk—comes uten de restaurant a-pickin' de lobster outen deir teeth

"Dat's de kind o' tales that makes me set up and take notice, an' give a meanin' look at Ike as Ma'y Jane reads um. Cose cullud folks ain't got no stenographer yet, but dere ain't no tellin' when the bill is headed yo way, an' I always was a forehanded woman specially wid Ike but Ma'y Jane she likes de stories whar de wife goes down on her knees an' begs an' prays de stenographer to give her back her po', dear husband, dough de good Lawd only knows whut makes any woman waste time on tryin' to get another woman to give up a good thing she's got hold of. Ef 'twas me I'd argify de question wid de man, an' by de time he got outen de horspitul hit would be so long dat he would a forgot whedder de gal wid de fuzzy-wuzzy hair whut used to pound his typewriter was named Birdie or Maudie

"Hit's mighty entertainin' readin' 'bout de stenographer, specially when yo' own husband is layin' brick an' ain't got no call to be settin' up in a office alongside of a pretty gal, wid a hour glass figure, an' a peaches-an'-cream skin dat makes him think every time he looks at her how much lak a feather bed you done got, an' wonder whut ever made him fool enough to marry you, but I wonder ef de wives don't kinder miss de fun in hit?

"My land, I know ef hit was Ike, I'd be a changin' de prar book to read, "From battle, murder an' good-lookin' stenographers, good Lawd, deliver me," case any woman dat couldn't git around Ike would have to be blind, dumb, humpbacked an' six mil''on years ole

"Nawm, I wouldn't be a-takin' no chances of Ike tellin' his troubles at home to a good-lookin' gal dat was paid to sympathise wid him, an' whose job depended on her rubbin' de fur de right way

"Cose dere is lots an' lots of stenographers dat's des as good as gold, an' dat we never reads 'bout in de papers, but de trouble is dat e bad ones is done hoodooed de perfession an' got de wives askeered dat dey balks at anything in petticoats, no matter ef its got carroty har, blear eyes an' false teeth, an' de time is comin' dat when a man marries he's got to pass up de lady stenographer fer his wife's peace of mind, an' to save hisself bein' nagged.

"An' dat's a pity, case shovin' de pen sho' is a job dat ought to belong to women. Hit's rough on de good women, but you can't blame de wives Dey can't tell whether a stenographer is good or flirty ontell after de divorce—an' den hit's too late

"Yassum, hit sholy is interestin' readin' 'bout de gay stenographer, but dere's one thing certain—ef Ike ever has to have a stenographer de pothook grabber will be ole an' ugly an' wear britches. I ain't gwine to take no chance on him tellin' a young an' pretty gal wid yaller hair dat he's misonderstood an' onappreciated at home.

"Nawm, dat I ain't." DOROTHY DIX.

What Are "East" and "West"?

By Garrett P. Serviss

HERE is a question from a Chicago man which calls up a subject that has probably puzzled many.

Will you please let me know if when a man starts out say from San Francisco and goes east until he gets back to 'Frisco, has he not travelled west just as much as he did east?

The answer is no; the man has not travelled west at all. He has been going east all the time

It is clear where the confusion arises. It comes from failure to consider the fact that "east" and "west" are not directions fixed with reference to a stationary point in space, but that they simply indicate the way round a circle. They are equivalent to the expressions "clockwise" and "counter clockwise," applied to the direction of movement of the hands on a dial The conceptions on which they are based had their physical origin in the rotation of the earth on its axis, causing the sun to appear to rise on one side and set on the other. In all languages the words for east and west will be found to be based on roots referring to the sunrise and the sunset. A very plain instance is furnished by "oriental," meaning eastern, and derived from the Latin oriri, "to rise," and "occidental" meaning western, and derived from occidere, "to go down" So our words "east" and "west" will be found to come from roots having similar meanings to those of Latin words just quoted.

Mathematically these terms refer simply to direction of rotation, or revolution, about a central point, and cannot be used in the sense which the writer of the question has in mind. "North" and "south," on the other hand, are directions referred to fixed points in space. They have been determined by the situation of the earth's axis of rotation, the two poles of that axis constituting the points toward and from which "north" and "south" are reckoned on the surface of the globe. The difference between the conception underlying the terms "east" and "west" and that underlying "north" and "south" is analogous to the difference between a circle and a straight line. It may also be illustrated by a very simple pair of diagrams, one of which represents the earth as seen from a point in space directly over the North Pole, and the other the earth as seen from any point in the plane of its Equator. In the first instance, if two men on the opposite side of the globe should both start walking westward it is clear that, no matter how long they continued, they would never meet, and the direction pursued by each would be continually west, no matter where he might be in the circuit. "West," if we choose to consider it as a point on which he fixes his eyes, continually flees before him as he advances, like the horizon itself

In the second instance, it is equally clear that if two men should start from opposite points on the Equator and walk straight north, they would meet at the pole, because north, unlike west, is a direction referred to a stationary point.

President Roosevelt Discovers the great American Poet

Where EDWIN ARLINGTON ROBINSON was born.

E. A. R

A NEW American poet has been discovered by President Theodore Roosevelt. His name is Edwin Arlington Robinson, and he is a native of Gardiner, Me. He is about thirty-five years of age, a graduate of Harvard University and at present occupies a position in the United States Treasury Department at New York.

He came to the notice of President Roosevelt through a little book of poems entitled "The Children of the Night," published in 1897 by Richard G. Badger & Co. of Boston. Only one edition of 500 copies on Batchworth laid paper and fifty copies on imperial Japanese vellum were printed, and the plates are owned by William E. Butler of this city. The volume is dedicated "To the memory of my father and mother."

A later work from the pen of Mr. Robinson is "Captain Craig," a book of poems published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co. in 1802. The title is taken from the longest poem, one of 10,000 words within the covers.

Show Undoubted Genius

"It is rather curious that Mr. Robinson's volume should not have attracted more attention," says President Roosevelt in the last number of the Outlook. "There is an undoubted touch of genius in the poems collected in this volume, and a curious simplicity and good faith, all of which qualities differentiate them sharply from ordinary collections of the kind.

"There is in them just a little of the light that never was on land nor sea, and in such light the objects described often have nebulous outlines, but it is not always necessary in order to enjoy a poem that one should be able to translate it into terms of mathematical accuracy.

"Indeed, those who admire the coloring of Turner, those who like to read how—and to wonder why—'Child Rowland to the Dark Tower came' do not wish always to have the ideas presented to them with cold, hard, definite outlines, and to a man with the poetic temperament it is inevitable that life should often appear clothed with a certain sad mysticism."

Likes Without Understanding

As an illustration of this, President Roosevelt declares he is not sure that he understands "Luke Havergal," but he is entirely sure that he likes it.

Here are the lines:

Go to the western gate, Luke Havergal,
There where the vines cling crimson on the wall,
And in the twilight wait for what will come.
The wind will moan, the leaves will whisper some—
Whisper of her, and strike you as they fall;
But go, and if you trust her she will call.
Go to the western gate, Luke Havergal—
Luke Havergal.

No, there is not a dawn in eastern skies
To rift the fiery night that's in your eyes;
But there, where western glooms are gathering,
The dark will end the dark, if anything:
God slays Himself with every leaf that flies,
And hell is more than half of paradise.
No, there is not a dawn in eastern skies—
In eastern skies.

Out of a grave I come to tell you this—
Out of a grave I come to quench the kiss
That flames upon your forehead with a glow
That blinds you to the way that you must go.
Yes, there is yet one way to where she is,
Bitter, but one that faith can never miss.
Out of a grave I come to tell you this—
To tell you this.

There is the western gate, Luke Havergal,
There are the crimson leaves upon the wall.
Go, for the winds are tearing them away,
Nor think to riddle the dead words they say,
Nor any more to feel them as they fall;
But go! and if you trust her she will call.
There is the western gate, Luke Havergal—
Luke Havergal.

"Whoever has lived in country America knows the gray, empty houses from which life has gone. It was of one of these that 'The House on the Hill' was written," says President Roosevelt.

Here is another poem by Mr. Robinson which the President greatly admires:

They are all gone away,
The house is shut and still,
There is nothing more to say.

Through broken walls and gray
The winds blow bleak and shrill;
They are all gone away.

Nor is there one to-day
To speak them good or ill;
There is nothing more to say.

Why is it then we stray
Around that sunken sill?
They are all gone away.

And our poor fancy-play
For them is wasted skill:
There is nothing more to say.

There is ruin and decay
In the House on the Hill;
They are all gone away.
There is nothing more to say.

And "Richard Cory," the next poem, to quote the words of the President, "illustrates a very ancient but very profound philosophy of life with a curiously local touch which points its keen insight."

Whenever Richard Cory went down town,
We people on the pavement looked at him;
He was a gentleman from sole to crown,
Clean favored, and imperially slim.

And he was always quietly arrayed,
And he was always human when he talked;
But still he fluttered pulses when he said,
"Good morning," and he glittered when he walked.

And he was rich—yes, richer than a king—
And admirably schooled in every grace;
In fine, we thought that he was everything
To make us wish that we were in his place.

So on we worked, and waited for the light,
And went without the meat, and cursed the bread;
And Richard Cory, one calm Summer night,
Went home and put a bullet through his head.

"Those who feel poetry in their marrow and fiber are the spiritual heirs of the ages," writes President Roosevelt; "and so it is natural that this man from Maine, many of whose poems could have been written only by one to whom the most real of lives is the life of the American small town, should write his 'Ballade of Broken Flutes'" (to A. T. Schumann) in which occur the lines:

The forest that was all so grand
When pipes and tabors had their sway
Stands leafless now, a ghostly band
Of skeletons in cold array.
A lonely surge of ancient spray
Told of an unforgetful sea,
But iron blows had hushed for aye
The broken flutes of Arcady.

"The same one only could have written the poem beginning

Since Persia fell at Marathon,
The yellow years have gathered fast;
Long centuries have come and gone;

and what President Roosevelt terms "the very original sonnet on Amaryllis," ending:

But though the trumpets of the world were glad,
It made me lonely and it made me sad
To think that Amaryllis had grown old.

"As in 'The Tavern,' he writes of what most of us feel we have seen, and then again of what we have only seen with the soul's eyes. Some of his images stay fixed in one's mind, as in 'The Pity of the Leaves,' the lines running

The brown thin leaves that on the stones outside
Skipped with a freezing whisper.

In conclusion, President Roosevelt quotes "The Wilderness" as a poem which could have been written only by a man into whose heart there had entered deep the very spirit of the vast and melancholy northern forests.

Come away! come away! there's a frost along the marshes,*
There's a moan across the lowland and a wailing through the woodland*
Of a dirge that sings to send us back to the arms of those that love us.*
Put off the Summer's languor with a touch that made us glad*
For the glory that is gone from us, with a flight we cannot follow,*

Come away! come away! you can hear them calling, calling,*
Calling us to come to them, and roam no more.*
Over there beyond the ridges and the land that lies between us,*
There's an old song calling us to come!

Come away! come away! for the scenes we leave behind us*
That love and all the dreams of love are away beyond the mountains.*
The songs that call for us to-night, they have called for men before us,*
And the winds that blow the message, they have blown ten thousand years;*
But this will end our wander-time, for we know the joy that waits us*

Come away! [illegible] nothing [illegible]
Nothing [illegible]
Over [illegible] there's [illegible]
And a woman [illegible] the [illegible]
Come away! [illegible] fiend [illegible]
And make us [illegible] to the [illegible]
There are [illegible]
There are none [illegible]
So we'll [illegible] the [illegible]
For the freedom that [illegible] the dread we do [illegible]
The frost that skips the [illegible] again be back to blast it,
And the doom we cannot fly from is the doom we do not see.

Come away! come away! there are dead men all around us—
Frozen men that mock us with a wild, hard laugh
That shrieks and sinks and whimpers in the shrill November rushes,
And the long fall wind on the [illegible]

His Climb to Fame

Mr. Robinson's [illegible] fame has been slow and arduous. In Gardiner it was the old story of the lack of belief and encouragement of "local talent"—and it is more especially marked in the case of young Robinson, for he is an austere man, albeit a young one, and he did not take kindly to the interference of strangers and his townsmen, however worthy or kindly may have been their intentions. True, he found companionship with Mrs. Laura E. Richards, the authoress and daughter of Julia Ward Howe, and with Dr. A. T. Schumann, poet and litterateur, and it is probably due to the untiring sympathy and co-operation of this gentleman that Robinson owes his high position in literature to-day.

Edwin Arlington Robinson was born thirty-five years ago in the little village of Head Tide, in reality a portion of the town of Alna, in Lincoln county, and a [illegible] of Gardiner. His father was the village store keeper.

Young Robinson attended the public graded schools and took the regular academic course in the Gardiner High School, from which he was graduated fifteen years ago. He was sent to Harvard. In the university he displayed [illegible] in his [illegible] tention of Professor [illegible] members of the faculty [illegible].

In an interview with a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN representative to-day Dr. Schumann gave an interesting recital of the manner in which young Robinson was first called to his attention. Said Dr. Schumann, "Oh, it was as long ago as fifteen or sixteen years, that I was first [illegible] rather curious, of course, and more so, when he asked me as to the mode of manufacture employed upon a sonnet. I explained the technicalities of a sonnet to the young fellow, and seeing that he was really sincere in his interest I urged him to call upon me at my home. He did so several times, and we had many an interesting talk together, for I found 'Win' a man of much promise, but, of course, somewhat crude.

"One day, he brought to me a sonnet, and I was surprised at its excellence. That was the beginning of 'Win's' writings. He wrote many poems and verses in those days, and many were queer.

"It was after he returned from Harvard that he wrote many of the best things that are contained in his "Captain Craig" book. We read the original drafting of the poems over, and I saw a gleam, then, of the great things that were in store for Robinson.

Struck a Popular Chord.

"The first book, or rather pamphlet, of Robinson's works he caused to be published himself. This pamphlet had no printed imprint, and but very few copies were struck off, less than one hundred. I [illegible] These were sent to the most prominent litterateurs in this country and in England, and 'Win' received many letters of commendation and encouragement from these great poets and authors. The pamphlet was entitled, "The Torrent and the Night Before," named from the first and last poems within the covers. "The Torrent" is a lyric, a short verse, and is conceded to be one of the best of Robinson's earlier writings. The last in the pamphlet, "The Night Before," is in blank verse and is of considerable length. This pamphlet was printed in 1895, and I know of no copies that are to be found save the one that I have, and possibly one other.

About two years later, in 1897, I went to Boston and negotiated with Richard G. Badger, a publisher, for a book of Robinson's poems. Mr. Badger was very keen to publish the book, and at his suggestion I persuaded Edwin to go to Boston and talk the matter over. Terms were finally arranged and in that year Mr. Badger published Robinson's first book, "The Children of the Night." In this book nearly all of the poems that appeared in the original pamphlet were reprinted and there were also many new ones.

"The Children of the Night" aroused a great flood of favorable and kindly words from the ablest critics both in this country and abroad, and many of Robinson's poems were translated into the languages. He received many flattering offers from periodical and book publishers, and in 1902 the Houghton Mifflin Company engaged to bring out a new book, which is called "Captain Craig, and Other Poems." The title is derived from the first poem in the book, a [illegible] in blank verse [illegible] original and [illegible].

During the past six years Robinson has made his home in New York, writing occasionally for the more important periodicals [illegible] is at work [illegible].

[illegible] of a [illegible] New York Sub-Treasury in [illegible] position to which he was appointed some two months ago, directly by President Roosevelt.

Why I Want to Be Governor of State of Massachusetts

Former Mayor John H. McNamee of Cambridge Sets Forth the Issues on Which He Is Making His Campaign—I'm in This Fight to Win, He Says.

By Charles O. Power.

"I HAVE been asked by a great many Democrats all over the State to run for Governor. I have no doubt of their sincerity, and for their sakes and for my own I shall make an earnest effort to win. The nomination will belong to any Democrat to whom the Democrats of the State may give it. If I am fairly defeated in the convention, then I shall take off my coat and work for the candidate with all my might. I see no reason to fear Curtis Guild. I believe the chances of Democratic success are bright. I am firmly of the opinion that the party must nominate a stalwart Democrat who will make a campaign worth while."

It was during the course of a quiet chat that John H. McNamee, former mayor of Cambridge, and the only avowed candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, said this to me. He said many other things, interesting and significant, things the slate makers of the party would do well to ponder upon.

In Contest to Win.

Frankly and freely he told me his hopes, his ambitions, his purposes. He is in this contest to win, and the leader who thinks otherwise will have reason to change his mind before the nomination is awarded. He may not win, and says he realizes that fact, but he is not to be scared or deterred by the possibility of defeat. He is not nursing the idea that the big leaders of the party will come to him and ask him to take the nomination. He says honestly that he wishes they would, as he would like to have their favor, but, with or without it, he purposes to remain in the race. He will appeal directly to the rank and file of the party in any event, and will not bank entirely on the promises of any set of men.

One thing may be said in Mr. McNamee's favor at the outset. He would make one of the best looking governors the State has ever had. He has a striking face, ruddy with the glow of health, a square jaw that denotes the fighter, a blue eye that twinkles as he tells a story, the crowning feature being a head of hair as white as the snow. He is of medium height and build, but every movement indicates strength and agility.

"I would like to be the Governor of Massachusetts. I believe it is a most honorable ambition for any man. I am not concealing the desire on my part to be a candidate for the place. I would like to lead the Democratic party this year, and can see no reason why I should hesitate to say so."

A Jeffersonian Democrat.

"What is your special purpose in seeking the nomination, Mr. McNamee? Now, what are you going to submit in your own behalf in asking the party for the nomination?" I inquired.

"What shall I say? Why, I shall say that I am a Jeffersonian Democrat, one who has always believed that if the principles of the Democratic party were followed in the making of the laws it would be very much better for the people of the Nation, States and municipalities. The Democratic party is the people's party, and I have always been of that party. It is the policy of the Democratic party to govern for the best interests of the whole people and not for any particular element."

"What are some of the things that the Democratic party should consider in building the platform this year."

"Of course, I should not attempt to dictate the platform, or seem to do so. I would not do such a thing. However, I believe that candidates should be consulted by the makers of the platform and their suggestions given due weight. Instead then, of trying to outline a platform, let me tell you how I stand on some of the important questions of the day in this State.

Favors Reciprocity.

"I am strongly in favor of reciprocity between this country and Canada. I have seen the need of a revision of the tariff as it affects New England for several years, and I say that the time has come for the need to removal of the tariff on coal, hides, iron and lumber. We have none of these commodities in this commonwealth and have to pay dearly for them under the present tariff law. For coal we are at the mercy of the coal barons of Pennsylvania; for iron we must pay the price of the Morgan steel trust; for hides we must take terms with the beef trust, and [illegible] limited by the lumber trust. [illegible] the election of a [illegible] Massachusetts has nothing to do with [illegible] reciprocity and the stand patters are insisting that it is a national issue and not one for the State to meddle with. One reason for this cry is that the stand patters are scared at the rapid rising of the tide toward reciprocity, and the other reason is that they are afraid the chances of their candidate for second place on the ticket, Eben Draper, may be hurt in the Republican convention, and, if nominated, hurt at the polls. I contend that reciprocity is a State issue, decidedly a State issue.

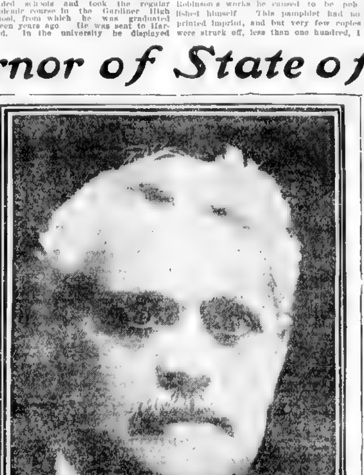
Effect on Congress.

With reciprocity as an element of this campaign, with the people of other States shown that there is a sincere interest in the question, with Massachusetts shouting the battle cry of reciprocity, Congress will have no excuse for saying that the sentiment of this section of the country for remedial tariff legislation was not known. The protectionists realize this. No reciprocity man is foolish enough to imagine that the election of a Governor of this State is going to bring about reciprocity or tariff revision, but every reciprocity man [illegible] know that the election of a Governor on a reciprocity platform and the defeat of a protectionist candidate for Lieutenant Governor would have great weight and effect in the next Congress. And [illegible] to bring about the ends they desire, the reciprocity men would do well to elect the Democratic ticket, thus serving notice on the law makers that with [illegible] reciprocity [illegible] will have to be fairly dealt with so that there may be an amelioration of the present depressing conditions in certain lines of business industry. I believe that if the high tariff is eliminated much of the graft of the trusts will be eliminated as surely as the clear day follows the darkest night. Notwithstanding the alarms of the protectionists of the favored industry class, I insist that reciprocity is a State issue and one the people are very much interested in.

Has Studied Taxation.

"That declaration certainly should satisfy the business elements that desire better trade relations with Canada, Mr. McNamee. What are some of the other things that appeal to you?"

"I have made a study of the taxation question in my own way and have some ideas on that question that might be worth considering. I believe strongly in the equalization of the burdens of taxation so that they will not bear more heavily on one citizen than on another.



John H. McNamee

For one thing I believe in a change in the [illegible] of assessing personal taxes. I [illegible] State [illegible] all personal taxes [illegible] and towns should collect these taxes, the [illegible] based upon [illegible] upon all real estate in cities and towns the year previous. To my mind this would solve the [illegible] that [illegible] of the [illegible].

"You [illegible] your tax on the tax question [illegible] stump, Mr. McNamee, and Mr. Guild would have to get a new set of figures. What are some of the other issues you would suggest?"

Local Self-Government.

"I want to say that I believe in the general principle of local self government. Every city and town should have self-government, and no law should stand that deprives them of it. Every city and town should [illegible] its own [illegible] force, and each should have the right to deal with the license question in its own way. I will go farther than that. I believe that when a community thinks it [illegible] public industry on which it is dependent, that community should have the right to assume control of that industry.

I hold that neither the State nor the municipality should invest the public monies in what are essentially private enterprises, nor even in what are called public enterprises unless the interests of the [illegible] I have no fault to find with combinations of capital that are trying to do a legitimate business and promote great undertakings, but when they attempt to crush individual efforts and ambitions and to extort tribute from the people they become a menace and should be severely dealt with. The public should always have protection against combinations of capital in [illegible]."

"What else would you put in your message to the party and the people, Mr. McNamee?"

"Elect Senators by People"

"I would tell them that I believe in the election of United States Senators by the people. I would say that I believe the people should have the privilege of keeping in the closest touch with all officials representing them. I really think that if some of these [illegible] I have outlined to you were incorporated in the party platform they would be elements of strength."

"Now, Mr. McNamee, to be successful, what sort of [illegible] the party must [illegible]?"

"It must be [illegible] of instruction and education. The candidates must appear before the people in as many localities as feasible and make their pledges. The campaign of last year was largely conducted on these lines. The result was a splendid victory for the Democracy. The State organization has been built up in the last few years and was brought to a state almost of perfection last year. The organization should get in touch and keep in touch with [illegible] town committee, and [illegible] what it will do this year.

I am firmly convinced that the labor vote in Massachusetts is in the main Democratic and would be loyal to that party if proper efforts were made to retain [illegible] wedge of last year [illegible] and if a well-known [illegible] advocate could be [illegible] with me I [illegible] the Democratic party would sweep the State.

"People Will Stand for It."

"If nominated I should speak in every section of the State. Guild and Draper [illegible] make a machine-made proposition that the Republicans must take. I believe the well-meaning people of this State, the people who have the best interests of the old Commonwealth at heart, will see the utter uselessness of electing as Governor a man who is nominally pledged to reciprocity and of electing as Lieutenant Governor an out and out, avowed protectionist. The absurdity of the situation must appeal to all thoughtful citizens. No such [illegible] saw [illegible] prevail. The people [illegible] stand for it.

"The Democrats, therefore, should put up a consistent ticket. Here is the opportunity for victory, if the right sort of [illegible]. If nominated I will do my share. My public record is clean, my party record beyond question and my one aim in this instance is to fight for a victory for the party that will redound to the benefit of the people."

"You may have to make a big fight for the nomination, Mr. McNamee."

"I shall make a fair fight and will say that [illegible] for me. If fairly defeated I will do my full share of the work for the success of the ticket. It is possible that I may not have to fight. Of course, I should prefer not to, but if I have to, I will make a good one. I am used to overcoming difficulties.

A Hard Worker.

"I have worked hard all my life and that is why I am so well and strong now at fifty-two years of age. There were ten children besides me in my father's family and you know what that means. I did [illegible] handed [illegible] the contest and [illegible] if it isn't. I [illegible] would be most agreeable [illegible] if it was."

A word about the career of Mr. McNamee. He was born in Randolph. He attended the old Lincoln School of South Boston in the primary grades. He has lived in Cambridge since 1860, attended the grammar schools there and finished his education at Boston College, earning the money with which to do it by working part of the time. He was in the bookbinding business from 1871 to 1902. He admits that he has enough to keep the wolf from the door if he does not have steady employment the rest of his life. He was a [illegible] in 1888 and has been a trustee of the Cambridge Public Library and one of the Cemetery Commissioners. In 1902 and 1903 he was Mayor of Cambridge.

Rush to Northern New England Resorts Is Greater Now Than at Any Time This Season

BIG CATCHES OF FISH REPORTED BY ANGLERS AT RANGELEY LAKES

Warm Days, Seemingly, Have No Effect on Finny Tribe in These Cool Northern Waters.

Rangeley, Me., Aug. 26. Never in the history of these now world-famous lakes have so many hundreds of people from all over the United States and foreign lands been entertained at one time as now.

Every hotel and public camp is crowded, and as soon as one party goes their places are quickly taken.

The weather has been ideal, and happy crowds pass most of the days out of doors, walking, driving, rowing on the lakes or on the golf links.

There have been over three hundred arrivals at the Rangeley Lake Hotel in less than a week, while there are many who have been here for weeks.

Among the well known people who have registered at this hotel the past week, many of them to remain until late in September, are Mr. and Mrs. Amory A. Lawrence of Boston, Professor James Munyon of Philadelphia, Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Thompson of Wilmington, Del., Captain W. H. Paine of Fort Leavenworth, Kan.; Mr. F. W. Cole of Hartford, Ct.; Mr. and Mrs. Howard Pemberton of Albany, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Moore and daughter of Plainfield, N. J.; Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Robbins and son of Roxbury, Mass.

One of the quickest automobile trips has been made from Philadelphia to the Rangeley Lake House this week by three gentlemen who are now at Seven Ponds, Messrs. E. George Lavino, James B. Duprey and J. E. Caldwell.

Mr. John S. McLean, a wealthy New York banker, who, with his daughter, are in one of the hotel cottages, with George [illegible], the guide he has had for his Rangeley fishing trips for over twenty years, this week caught in Rangeley Lake a trio of salmon that would gladden the heart of any angler. They weighed 3½, 4½ and 5½ pounds each.

Senator A. J. Beveridge of Indiana thinks this one of the finest places he has ever visited. A pastime for the Senator is horseback riding among the hills, and he often passes hours in the saddle.

Outlook cottage, on the Rangeley Lake Hotel grounds, is taken by the following party: Mr. and Mrs. E. Ledelley of Hampton, L. I., and their daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Philip S. Ruxton of Brooklyn, N. Y., and their friends: Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Hoyle and daughter, Miss Marion, of Philadelphia, and Mr. George Sheldon Chaney of Brooklyn, N. There is now to be a ladies' tournament, T. H. Banchell, Jr., of New York, having presented a handsome cup, and there are several entries which promise an exciting game.

Portland, Aug. 26.—Portland has enjoyed the largest Summer resort business in its history, guests by the hundreds being turned away from its hotels and boarding houses. Despite certain prophesies, the Sturgis law has not kept away Summer trade.

Fritz H. Jordan, regarded as one of Portland's incorrigible bachelors, and Miss Ethel Davies Abbott, whose mother was a former Portland belle, were quietly married Tuesday in the chapel at St. Luke's Cathedral, Bishop Codman officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Jordan will live in the residence on Pleasant street formerly the W. R. Wood place, which Mr. Jordan has lately purchased.

Hampton Beach

Hampton Beach, N. H., Aug. 26.—Wednesday of this week was one of the biggest days of the season at Hampton Beach. It was Amesbury day and, from all appearances, nearly all of the inhabitants of that town came to New Hampshire's Coney Island to pass the day. The program was less elaborate than that of Farmer's day, but the crowds were fully as large.

Judge Harry A. Shute of Exeter, the famous author of "The Real Diary of a Real Boy," is at Leavitt's Hotel.

All the hotels are filled to their capacity and there is not a single unoccupied cottage along the Hampton coast. The Hampton Beach season is shorter than that of some of the other resorts in this section, but there is every prospect that it will continue long after the first of September.

Hon. William E. Chandler, formerly United States Senator from New Hampshire and now chairman of the Spanish Claims Commission, was a visitor here on Thursday.

The theatrical performances in the Casino Theatre attract many people from Exeter, Portsmouth and other nearby towns every pleasant evening.

Preparations are now being made for Labor Day. This holiday has usually marked the close of the season here, but it is not likely that it will this year. A great many sojourners have signified their intention of remaining throughout the month of September and many more will stay until the middle of that month.

Years ago Portsmouth day was always observed here early in September, but of late the New Hampshire seacoast town has had no day set apart for it. It was hoped that the custom would be revived this year, but Portsmouth has been too busy to consider it. Next season, however, it is almost certain that Portsmouth will again take its place among those celebrated at Hampton Beach.

York Beach

York Beach, Me., Aug. 26.—York Beach has steadily increased in popularity as a place of Summer sojourn, and this season will break all records. Since the first of July there has hardly been a vacant cottage or a vacant room in a hotel. The season will be the most prosperous the beach has ever known.

There has been great interest in base ball here this year. The regular team has been playing two or three games a week and has been victorious in all but two of these contests. In addition a series of games is being played between teams representing the different hotels. The Kearsarge House team seems in a fair way to win the championship, having defeated the Hastings, Lyman and Ocean House teams. It numbers among its members several of the cleverest players here.

On Wednesday evening Mrs. A. H. Day gave her annual reception to the members of her juvenile dancing class at the Algonquin. It was one of the most interesting social events of the season, and was enjoyed by a great number of parents and adult friends of the children. The exhibition dances were especially interesting, and the young people acquitted themselves in a manner most creditable to themselves and to their instructress.

D. N. Barnes and Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Spooling of Philadelphia are among the guests at Hotel Wahnita.

Whist parties are held every week at nearly all of the hotels. It is probable that a tournament will be arranged for next week, teams from the various hotels and cottages contesting for a trophy. Much interest has been shown in the project, and it is likely that a tournament will be a feature of the closing weeks of the season.

The Ocean House tennis tournament will probably be abandoned for this year.

PRETTY BROCKTON GIRL A HEROINE AT VERONA

Miss Goldie Dunbar's Rescue of Two Boys From Sinking Yacht Will Not Soon Be Forgotten.

Bangor, Me., Aug. 26.—Among the most popular of the young people spending the summer at Verona Park is Miss Goldie Dunbar of Brockton. She is a decided favorite and is known to all the visitors at Verona and other Penobscot bay and river resorts. Miss Dunbar is a skillful sailor, managing a boat in the stiffest of blows with an ease and grace that marks the true yachtswoman; a fine swimmer—in fact, an all round athlete.

Miss Dunbar's act of heroism last season when in company with Miss Cora Lockard, she put out in a small boat in the teeth of a fierce gale and rescued two little boys from a sinking yacht will not soon be forgotten in the Penobscot region.

York Harbor

York Harbor, Me., Aug. 26.—The present season at York Harbor will eclipse in brilliancy any previous season in the history of this resort. Not only have the hotel proprietors and cottage owners recorded an unprecedented number of visitors, but the social calendar has been of unusual importance and interest.

The welfare of the York Hospital has engaged the attention of the visitors to an unexpected degree. They have shown great interest in the project for the establishment of such an institution here and this has encouraged those who instituted the enterprise to elaborate plans for a permanent building. A portable house of three rooms has already been purchased, largely with the contributions of the Summer residents. It has been located in an [illegible] substantial structure will have been provided, where cases of all kinds may be treated.

This evening an amateur vaudeville performance was given in Lancaster Hall for the benefit of the hospital and was attended by very nearly every Summer resident. It was a success, both from an artistic and a financial standpoint. The exact receipts are not yet known, but it is estimated that at least $200 will be added to the hospital fund.

The most interesting event of the season thus far was the Japanese fete given on Thursday on the grounds of Mrs. Newton Perkins. The exhibition of jiu jitsu and judo by Professor Yamashita, Madame Fude Yamashita and the professor's assistant, was unlike anything ever before seen by most of those in the great audience and was of peculiar interest at this time. At 5 o'clock tea was served by attractive young ladies, wearing Japanese and Russian costumes. The proceeds of the fete will be equally divided between the York Improvement Society and the York Hospital.

An amusing story is told relative to the visit of the Japanese minister, Mr. Takahira, [illegible] Takeshita and Mr. Hanahira, members of the Japanese peace embassy, to the York Country Club last week. The distinguished guests were not only introduced to all the club members, but to all the employes of the club, including the caddy boys. Among the latter is a lad of unusually attractive personal appearance and Mr. Takahira expressed a desire to take a snapshot of him. The boy was evidently not versed in camera terms and evidenced considerable trepidation. When pressed to comply with the diplomat's request, he expressed willingness to shake hands with the representative of the Mikado, but a decided aversion to being shot. It was some time before the lad could be convinced that a snapshot had never been known to result fatally.

The next two weeks are expected to be the busiest of the season at York Harbor. A greater number of people have applied for board at the hotels than can possibly be accommodated.

Isles of Shoals

Isles of Shoals, N. H., Aug. 26.—Guests at the Appledore and Oceanic hotels this year have not lacked for entertainment. The various annual meetings have all been held, but both hotels are filled and the season has been unusually busy.

The New Hampshire Weekly Publishers' Association held its meeting at the Shoals this year, and the New Hampshire Society of Colonial Wars, the members of the New England Universalist conference and the Unitarians of the Eastern States were also entertained.

On Tuesday there was an exhibition of Florentine, Venetian, Maltese and Japanese rugs at the Appledore. Among the rugs shown were some of exquisitely beautiful design and the exhibition was keenly enjoyed.

The concerts by the Appledore Orchestra are pleasing features of the daily life at the hotel. The orchestra visits the Oceanic several times a week and dances are always held in the big dance hall when it appears.

The Oceanic has of late years come to be known as the convention hotel. More annual meetings are held there than at any other hotel on the coast.

Newcastle, N. H.

Newcastle, N. H., Aug. 26.—Newcastle is the most important summer resort on the Atlantic coast this year. Through its famous hostelry, Hotel Wentworth, the quaint little island town has become known throughout the world. The presence here of the Russian and Japanese peace envoys has resulted in crowding all the hotels, boarding houses and cottages and thousands of applications have of necessity been refused.

The famous Fort Banks band from Winthrop, Mass., sent here in honor of the peace envoys, has been giving weekly concerts at Newcastle and Portsmouth and plays twice a week at the Wentworth.

Judge Henry Dewey of Boston is among the guests at Hotel Wentworth.

Shuffleboard is the popular game at the Wentworth this year. It has been played by diplomats and has been given considerable international interest by the presence of the envoys and the foreign correspondents. It is not a game requiring a large amount of skill or athletic ability, but it is amusing and serves as a Summer pastime. Up to the present time the Americans have rather easily disposed of their European and Asiatic opponents.

The annual Hotel Wentworth tennis tournament last week was one of the best ever held. There was considerable interest in the young Russian newspaper man, Boris Souvorine, who was one of the contestants. Those who had seen Souvorine play expected him to acquit himself creditably, but he went out in his very first match.

There have been fewer social events than usual at the Wentworth, probably because of the keen interest in the great game which the envoys are playing. There have been numerous informal dances and whist tournaments, nevertheless, and in some of these minor officials of the two embassies have taken part.

An interesting automobile club is being organized here with a view to the protection of the general public and to the automobilists themselves. Martin, Henry Bull, Jr., W. Watts Sherman, Reginald C. Vanderbilt, William S. Cooper and Philip A. Conroy.

It is proposed to run their machines at a reasonably moderate speed and to induce others to do likewise. On the other hand, the club members do not propose to submit to the annoyance of suits by every Tom, Dick and Harry who happens along with a grievance and who is pleased to sue them for some fancied fault. The club proposes pushing vigorously with this end in view.

There was glorious weather for the opening days of the national lawn tennis tournament at the Casino, which brought out an array of Doucet gowns and Virot hats excelled only at the horse show. Villa Rosa, with its newly acquired land, now occupies almost an entire square, extending from Dixon street to Narragansett avenue, and is one of the show places at Newport. Many took occasion to stop and congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Morse on the success of their entertainment. Bar Harbor

Bar Harbor, Me., Aug. 26.—The sixth annual horse show, given by the Bar Harbor Fair Association, which took place on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week, was an unqualified success. The weather conditions were ideal, and it is interesting to note that in the six years that the show has been held there have been but two days when the weather conditions were not favorable. The show differed somewhat from those of former years, in that horse trotting was eliminated and the forenoon sessions were discontinued. These changes evidently did not interfere with the attendance, as some had predicted. The receipts were the largest in the history of the show. The town was practically deserted so far as Summer visitors were concerned while the show was in progress, and the neighboring resorts furnished many to swell the attendance. There were thirty-five classes, all well filled, besides a number of exciting running races, hurdle races, etc.

Some of those who won blue ribbons were William B. Cochran, Jr., W. H. N. Vose, J. L. Kitteridus, Miss Hare, John [illegible] Kane, Miss Effie Pearson, Mrs. Buchanan Winthrop, General Edward Morrell, Philip Livingston and Stafford's [illegible].

The sports consisted of tug of war in canoes, tilting contest in canoes, diving, fifty yard dash, [illegible] yard [illegible] for ladies, [illegible] diving contests of many kinds, canoe race for mixed teams, etc. The most interesting event was the 200 yard relay race for the championship of Mt. Desert Island, which was won by the Northeast Harbor team.

Another function on Monday which attracted a large number of society people was the reception given at the Pot and Kettle Club by Captain Bush in honor of the Misses Hood of New Orleans. The Misses Hood are the daughters of the late Confederate general, John B. Hood, and it is a fine testimonial to the very amicable relations now existing between the North and the South that the guests of Captain Bush on this occasion included a number of Union generals. One of [illegible] was [illegible] General [illegible] who was a classmate of General Hood at West Point in the class of 18[illegible].

About 250 people went to the club to pay their respects to the Misses Hood who came over from Grindstone, where they are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Bliss. Among the other military men present in addition to General Scofield were General Edward H. Ripley, General Thomas Hubbard. Our host, Captain Bush, was [illegible] in the Union army, Colonel [illegible] Farnam of the [illegible] and John Hone, who was a member of the Seventh New York. Music was furnished by the Bar Harbor Band and [illegible] the guests of honor the first selection was "Dixie," which was followed by "The Star Spangled Banner."

There was the largest number of dancers at the Swimming Club hop Monday evening ever seen there. Prior to the dance there were fifty-four diners at the club, those who entertained being Mr. Philip Livingston, Mrs. W. H. Macey, Mr. Francis [illegible] and Miss Hopkins. Miss Hopkins's guests were Mr. and Mrs. Emery, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde, Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Keith and Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Clyde of Philadelphia are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Keith, of the same city, at Ocean Cottage [illegible].

[illegible] tennis tournament [illegible] J. White [illegible] were played Monday afternoon [illegible] Pearson and [illegible] being witnessed and [illegible] by a large number of people. Mr. Pearson, who is a very clever player, succeeded in defeating his adversary after three well played rattles, the score being [illegible] 15 to 9 and 15 to 9. Mr. Pearson thus becomes the possessor of the handsome cup offered by Mrs. White.

Mr. and Mrs. William F. Sheehan of New York, who are at the Malvern, gave a dinner of twenty covers Saturday evening.

Old Orchard

Old Orchard Beach, Me., Aug. 26.—While the end of the season is in sight and hundreds of tourists have departed for [illegible] homes the past week, the hotels are still well filled as the influx has been much larger than in previous years at the end of the Summer. The weather has been the most invigorating and delightful [illegible] the past six days.

[illegible] of the week was the annual [illegible] of the Redberry Club of Boston, held at the Baker field at Pine Point and attended by upwards of fifty Redberrys and their lady friends. Hon. Richard Sullivan of Boston, grand patriarch of the Redberrys of the world, was unable in consequence of business cares, to be present, and he invited ex-Congressman John F. Fitzgerald to take his place.

In the game of baseball the team captained by the ex-Congressman won. The clam bake was the best ever given, and greatly enjoyed by the Bostonians. The bake was followed by dancing and singing at the Seashore House.

Mr. and Mrs. J. M. O'Brien of Boston are at the Old Orchard House.

Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Mitchell of Boston were recent arrivals at the Velvet.

H. Purdy of Boston was at the Seashore House this week.

Miss Josephine Bogan of Boston has been rusticating at the Seashore House the past six days.

Another tea that brought out the young contingent, was given by Miss Laura Brewster, at the Brewster place at Darby Pond, in honor of Mrs. Yoemans of Buffalo. Mrs. Yoemans has rather a heritage of beauty, as her mother was a Baldwin of New Orleans, and reigned a number of times as Queen of Mardi Gras, while a girl there. Mrs. Yeomans was considered the most beautiful matron in Buffalo, where she went as a bride. Her cousin, Miss Brewster, by whom the tea was given, is a very handsome girl of the marvellous blonde type, that is rapidly disappearing, but she eschews men and devotes herself to art She studied portrait painting under Julien in Paris and although she paints only in a dellettante sort of way, if she were put to it, could make a place for herself in the world of art.

SOCIETY FOLKS AWAITING GENIUS WHO WILL FIND DIVERSION FOR THEM

THE social season at the different summer resorts has reached its zenith and is on the wane. Now the desire for some new recreation fills the hearts of those who have entered into the various whirlpools of fashion the past fortnight, and thus far no one has been able to invent a new diversion for the pleasure of old and young.

Autumn's wings are heard in the distance and with the first sign of golden foliage people start in droves for camps and mountain hotels, there to rest after one of the most brilliant social seasons in years. The characteristic of this season has been the numerous out-of-door festivities, which have had a marked success, and on only a few occasions has society been prone to berate poor old Sol for hiding his face and weeping bitter tears.

Society people are beginning to return from the other side, and the steamers that docked the past week were fairly crowded. Hereafter all incoming liners will carry to their fullest capacity, as many of our ultra fashionables, who have been touring the continent, are booked to return the first weeks of September.

The Essex County Club on the North Shore was the centre of fashion the past week, when the Horticultural Society held its flower show on the grounds of the club. The large tent that was erected for the occasion was crowded. It will be remembered that previously the society held its shows in the Town Hall, but this year the committee decided on an out-door show and the results have proved very successful. An event that helped along the show was the weekly band concert at the Essex Club. This has always proved a grand drawing card. The broad veranda of the club was prettily decorated and all the tables were reserved for afternoon teas.

Among the patronesses of the event were Mrs. C. P. Hemenway, Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mrs. [illegible] Hooper, Mrs. H. S. Grew, Mrs. James McMillan, Mrs. W. R. Walker, Mrs. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Mrs. William H. [illegible], Mrs. George Cabot, Mrs. W. Scott Fitz, Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby and Mrs. Bartlett.

One of the merriest groups was that that gathered around Mrs. Higginson, who was Miss Hetty Sargent, and who has recently returned from abroad. Mrs. Higginson, after entertaining a number of friends at luncheon at her Coolidge's Point villa, drove over in her familiar yellow cart. Baroness Rosen, with her pretty young daughter, Miss Elizabeth, accompanied by the Russian Consul of Chicago, were among the interesting spectators.

Among others prominent in society were Mrs. Wallace Goodrich, Mrs. James Means, Mrs. J. M. Sargent, Mrs. [illegible] Newhall, Mrs. Claude Kilpatrick, Miss F. D. Boardman, Mrs. C. A. Boardman, Mrs. W[illegible] McMillan, Miss E. C. [illegible], Mrs. J. W. Merrill, Mrs. H. H. Stevens, Mrs. Greeley Curtis, Mrs. T. S. Lockwood, Mrs. S. B. Dana, Mrs. John Reece and many others.

Race suicide in Massachusetts? Take a look at the fashionable resort of Nahant and you may change your mind about the subject of rich people not caring for a generation to follow. Between the attention to the brides and the babies time seems to be pretty well taken up at this famous resort, and the babies seem to get the best part of the divided attention. Close on the heels of the arrival of an heir in the Harleston Parker family comes the glad tidings that an heiress was born to the Archibald Blanchards, who are occupying the picturesque estate of Mrs. Blanchard's mother, the Hon. Mrs. George Dan[illegible] of London.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Rollin H. The interior is finished in Elizabethan style, while the dining-room is a masterpiece, with a large carved fireplace, which is surmounted by a crest. FRANCE ARMING FOR A CLASH WITH KAISER.

Moroccan Conference, It Is Said, Will Never Be Held, and European Republic Now Prepares for the Worst

FRESH PRETENSIONS ARE EXPECTED FROM GERMANY

BY MARQUIS DE CASTELLANE.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 26.—There would seem to be a calm in the [illegible] world in France but in reality [illegible] exists in the [illegible] and fashionable [illegible]. I have lately been in a position to satisfy myself that there is not actual [illegible] in the highest governing circles. The truth is that in spite of the conciliatory attitude that prevails we are daily expecting Germany to put forward fresh pretensions. A man who has lately been Governor M. Revoil, had the courage the other day to express his apprehensions in public. He is generally indicated as one of the plenipotentiaries who are to represent France at the conference called together by the Sultan of Morocco, which nevertheless did not prevent him from expressing his opinion that the conference in question would never meet. And at this time the French Government, with good cause, is arming herself. Whatever the truth of this may be, there is not the slightest doubt that great events are shaping themselves for the near future.

* * *

Two big marriages are to mark the [illegible] season—that of Mlle. Marie de [illegible] with Prince Alexander Wittgenstein, and that of the Marquis de Mortemart with Mlle. Pa[illegible]. Both these marriages are worth noting on account of the illustrious military names they call to mind. Mlle. de [illegible] is the daughter of one of our best generals, who has been on the retired list for the last five years, and Mlle. de Pa[illegible] is the granddaughter of the celebrated [illegible] who during the time of the Second Empire took Pekin at the head of [illegible] Frenchmen. In these days of anti-militarism such marriages are of interest [illegible] remark [illegible] in looking back on the past that the [illegible] which certain [illegible] dream of to-day live more in the imagination of the [illegible] than in the thoughts of practical people.

* * *

Monsieur Pierre de Nolhac, a gentleman of ancient lineage, more than one of whose ancestors took part in the Crusades, has been appointed by the Government curator of the Versailles Museum, showing us once more how true it is that men and the places they inhabit have a kind of solidarity the one with the other. The Versailles of Louis XIV could not be administered by a self-made man. The French Republic, in spite of its tendencies to make France date from the arrival of the democracy, that is to say a hundred years ago, follows the usual order of things, and has placed the trust of protecting the palaces of our ancient kings in the hands of a descendant of a royalist family, and the palace is none the worse for it, rather the contrary. It has never under any regime been better kept or more beautiful, and never has there been a more [illegible]. M. de Nolhac is the [illegible] of the [illegible] and historical investigators, always [illegible] and never [illegible] any circumstance [illegible] them his aid.

* * *

The young Count Gabriel de Rochefoucault, the esteemed author of "L'Amant et le Meunier," which he brought out last Winter, is [illegible] a very [illegible] of literature. He has just left for Switzerland through which he is going to travel alone, as it is his intention, it appears, to take his future heroines into that country. This is the work of a conscientious author, and not one of those who turn out literature by the yard. This young gentleman, for whom a great future is [illegible], is a disciple of [illegible], who, as is well known, left nothing [illegible] his writings to chance or to an [illegible] imagination. He has, moreover, ancestors who have set him an example, for his great-grandfather the Duc de Liancourt, was one of the most distinguished figures both in the philanthropy and the literature of the last century. The Comte will be supported in the glorious career which he has adopted by his wife, who belongs to the family of Richelieu, and who [illegible] the aid of her exceptional gifts. If this interesting collaboration does not produce something great before long it will be very astonishing.

* * *

The week which has just passed will not have been barren for French society. It is the richer for a new duke, a new duke who is perfectly authentic and legitimate, and this in republican France. Comte Frisch de Fels has risen in the ranks of nobility. This gentleman having learned that there existed in the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg a domain of the same name as his own which constituted a dukedom, bought it, and for a small monetary consideration obtained the investiture of the duchy from the Grand Duke. So he raised himself by this simple means to the highest degree of the aristocratic ladder without having to resort to the government of the republic.

KAISER'S SECOND SON IS NEXT ROYAL BRIDEGROOM

PRINCESS ALEXANDRA OF SCHAUMBURG-LIPPE.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Berlin, August 26.—"I want my boys," he has lived to grow up to be good manly men, to marry early and settle down and to rear large families" said Emperor William of Germany a number of years ago when his family was still small. The Emperor is now seeing a part of his wish gratified. It was only a short time ago that the Crown Prince Frederick was married with impressive [illegible] and now the betrothal of the Emperor's second son, Prince Eitel Fritz, to the Princess Alexandra of Schaumberg-Lippe is announced. Prince Eitel Fritz is known as the Sailor Prince of Germany and is a great favorite with every one.

His bride-to-be is the youngest daughter of the Prince and Princess William. Her eldest sister is the Queen of Wurtemberg, and her brother is the husband of the Princess Marie Louise of Denmark, a favorite niece of Queen Alexandra of England.

No date for the [illegible] ceremony has been set. The young couple are supremely happy [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] the Sailor Prince Eitel has chosen for himself.

SOLDIERS' CORSETS TO BE BULLETPROOF

Special Cable to Sunday American.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 26.—The War Office has been informed that 100,000 soldiers' corsets are ready for shipment. The corsets, made in Harcourt, are absolutely bullet proof.

The corsets, costing $15 each, consist of a piece of "iron tin," reinforced in front by a four-ply linen bolster. In the back the bolster is only three-ply. The bullet-proof linen looks like sail cloth; the corset is not finished until it is soaked for some weeks in a chemical bath.

Linevitch and all the other generals and most of the officers of the Manchurian army are already wearing corsets, but the Czar's General-in-Chief hopes he will not have to risk battle again until his soldiers, too, are provided with the protection.

GORKI'S TRANSLATOR UPHELD IN COURT

Paris, Aug. 26.—A French writer, who has translated several of the works of Maxim Gorki has been sued by a Munich firm, who claim exclusive rights in translations of the Russian author's works on the Continent. This, it appears, was the arrangement made with Gorki himself and it appears now from the legal discussion of the case that this cannot hold good, but that, according to law, a Russian author in order to protect his works abroad must first publish in a foreign city before he does so in his own country, as any one may translate from a Russian author. Judgment was given for the French translator.

RARE 'CATON' VOLUME SELLS FOR $6,750

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 26.—At Christie's a rare Caxton has just been disposed of. The volume was a copy of "Caton," which was [illegible] from the French into English by Caxton in the Abbey of Westminster 1484, the first year of the reign of Richard III. A bibliographer of Caxton's works has enumerated eight copies of "Caton," the two largest being the Devonshire and Lennox copies. The Devonshire copy was acquired at the beginning of the last century, and it is said that the owner of Chatsworth paid 100 guineas for it. At the Astle [illegible] in 1897 £265 was paid for a [illegible] copy which a little later was acquired by Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, and in 1891 another [illegible] copy realized £360. The copy of "Jason" in the Ashburnham sale brought in £2,100, and the "Ryall Book," in 1902, £225, both of which have gone to American collectors. The "Caton" just sold brought $6,750.

$10,000 PINNED TO WAIF'S CLOTHES

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 26.—A small motor car pulled up before a cottage in a small Brittany fishing village the other day and out of it jumped an elegantly dressed young man, who left a parcel just inside the door of the house and drove off again at full speed. The mistress of the house, a road mender's wife, returning a few minutes later, opened the outside parcel and found in it a healthy baby eight days old. Her own supply of olive branches being plentiful enough she put the baby out again on the side of the road. A peasant woman passing heard the child's cries, picked it up and took it home. On undressing the infant she found pinned to its clothes $10,000 in bank notes. She has naturally adopted the little waif, and the road-mender's wife wishes she had not been so hasty.

RECRUITING OFFICER INSULTS A GENERAL

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 26.—There is a good story going about the military clubs at the expense of Major-General Plumer, a member of the army council and a functionary of the [illegible] War Office. The General, who, although a very good soldier, as was proved in the South African war, is a very insignificant looking man of frail physique, desired to find out for himself the true state of recruiting for the army, which is at a very low ebb just now.

The General thought that perhaps the recruiting sergeants were not persuasive enough, or that perhaps they were somewhat rough [illegible]. He [illegible] and presented himself to a certain Sergeant as a raw recruit.

The Sergeant merely looked him up and down, spat on the pavement and remarked: "We don't want worms in the army—we want men."

The General concealed his wrath admirably, but the story got about, and the unfortunate Sergeant, who soon discovered who the august personage he addressed really was, has now been relieved of his duties for not knowing how to deal with would-be recruits.

ALEXANDRA AIDS THEATRE ATTENDANT

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 26.—There is no end to the stories afloat about the goodness and benevolence of Queen Alexandra, but undoubtedly many of the kindly acts she does never comes to light at all.

Her Majesty is always considerate for those about her. This was exemplified at the Royal Opera. The attendant who receives Her Majesty at the royal entrance and escorts her to her box has been in bad health for some time and looks like a wreck.

Her Majesty noticed this and on learning from him that he had been ordered to go away to recuperate, but could not afford it, called for pen and paper and wrote out on the spot an order on a convalescent home in which she is interested, and gave it to the delighted attendant.

GROOM IS ACCUSED OF MURDERING COUNTESS.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Rome, Aug. 26.—Count Ad[illegible] Ben[illegible]rulli, nobleman of eccentric character, is charging his groom, Antonio P[illegible], with having indirectly caused the death of the Countess Be[illegible], his wife, who committed suicide by poisoning herself.

Count Be[illegible] [illegible] sent once to the groom [illegible] after to impersonate [illegible] functions in Rome [illegible] he occupied [illegible] by [illegible] of [illegible].

Meeting the Countess [illegible] he paid her assiduous [illegible] the surprise [illegible] some years suffered [illegible] her husband [illegible].

She afterward discovered that she had been tricked, and that the distant count was her husband's valet.

Kneeling at the feet of Paolo's wife, she entreated her to pardon her and returned [illegible] to her husband's house.

The same night she was found dead, having poisoned herself with an overdose of [illegible].

On her dressing [illegible] was found a letter in which she stated that she had believed Paolo to be the Count and that the thought of what she had done had driven her to suicide, as she was unwilling to sully the spotless record of her noble ancestry.

The trial of Paolo has been adjourned, pending an inquiry into the circumstances of the tragedy.

TWO LIONS DEVOUR A FOOLHARDY MAN

Blackpool, England, Aug. 26.—Two lions, the property of the city, were found loose in the yard adjoining [illegible] together with portions of [illegible] a [illegible] workingman. The man had made the boast that he would enter the lions' cage. In an attempt to carry out his boast he opened the cage.

STOCKINGLESS SISTERS CARE FOR BLIND, DEAF AND CRIPPLED

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 26.—A fine old seventeenth century house has been taken and renamed Tolstoy House. It is managed by a sisterhood, presided over by "Sister Honnor," who is known to the world as Miss Honnor Morten, a member of the old London School Board. She founded the settlement in connection with Mr. Aylmer Maude.

In addition to living the simple life, the sisters devote themselves to caring for blind, deaf and crippled children from the slums of London who are brought out for a few weeks in the fresh country air.

Though the ordinary diet of the house is vegetarian, sisters who are not yet converted to a fleshless regime are allowed meat.

Each new recruit, so Sister Honnor explains, is required to obey the rules faithfully, but she is perfectly free to leave if obedience [illegible] at any time become irksome.

Rules for Members.

Among the rules to which the members have [illegible] allegiance are the following:

One—Members must wear a short, simple dress, the sleeves of which can be turned up to the elbow. No jewelry must be worn, except a brooch.

Two—Members are requested to bring as little luggage as possible, and no superfluities of any kind.

Three—Members are not to grumble to one another, but to take all complaints to the sister-in-charge, or else bring them forward at chapter.

Four—One hour each day must be spent in silence, either in meditation or in study of certain selected books.

In the "Observance Book," a sacred volume with the Tolstoyans, the sisters voluntarily sign their names to certain observances.

The stage they have attained in the process of Tolstoyan development is marked by the number of observances the sisters bring themselves to sign.

One Pledge Hard to Obey.

Not one of the ladies, earnest Tolstoyites though they are, has had the strength of mind to sign the following vow:

"We forbid ourselves all scandal and evil speaking."

One brave young sister has, however, promised "deliberate resistance" to the tidal waves of fashion.

On Saturday nights, when the little charges are safely tucked away in their [illegible] white beds under the [illegible] rafters the sisters [illegible] of [illegible] feeble who shall be [illegible] and who shall be nurses for the ensuing week.

"Tolstoy House," said Sister Honnor, "is only in the experimental stage, but we hope to make it a permanent settlement where women of leisure can [illegible] useful life, working for the afflicted little ones of London. At present the helpers only remain a few weeks, but we hope that some, who really have a liking for the work, may remain."

MANUSCRIPT FOUND CLEARS MYSTERY

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Vienna, Aug. 26.—While pursuing his studies of the history of astronomy and astrology at the Imperial Library in this city the Norwegian professor, Dr. Axel Bjernho, has discovered a most valuable manuscript in the handwriting of the first North Pole explorer, known as Claudius Claussen.

The manuscript, which dates from the beginning of the fifteenth century, is exceedingly well preserved and shows how far the Norwegian explorer penetrated into Greenland and where he named a number of settlements, the origin of whose names has heretofore been veiled in mystery.

LONDON TO TURN ON STAGE BALLET

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 26.—Now that the theatrical season proper is over, London managers have been going over the box office receipts and have, for some unaccountable reason, come to the conclusion that the season has been a very bad one. Yet the London season of 1905 has been a [illegible] brilliant one from a social point of view.

More than one music hall, too, has suffered severely, but this can be accounted for by the fact that there are too many music halls now in London and too little talent to go round.

There are rumors that the popular Empire Theatre will open again in the Autumn with performances after the more refined style of the Palace Theatre, and that ballets will be a thing of the past.

"Wizard" Blamed for Drought and Body Is Dug from a Grave and That of a Living Village Pope Is Substituted

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Odessa, Aug. 26.—A poor Russian village priest has been buried alive by a [illegible] of peasants in [illegible].

The body of the dead wizard was [illegible] exhumed and placed [illegible] against a tree around which forty or fifty of the peasants danced a weird dance to the [illegible] of [illegible].

In the midst of the curious ceremonial [illegible] arrived. The villagers, thinking he had come to [illegible], [illegible] greeted him with joyous greetings.

To their surprise and disgust, however, the priest not only [illegible] to assist in the affair but upbraided them for their superstition and their sacrilegious [illegible].

The crowd grew indignant. Some shouted that he was the real wizard, as the spirit of the dead man had entered into his body. The priest was accordingly seized and, despite his shrieks for mercy, was bound [illegible] into the opened grave, the remains of the corpse being flung in after him with earth and stones.

Pitiable Plea for Help From Christians Who Are Being Subjected to Awful Tortures by Subjects of the Sultan

REIGN OF TERROR IS INAUGURATED BY TURKS

By Lady Henry Somerset.

London, Aug. 26.—Once more Europe is shocked by the pitiable cries for help which come from our Christian brethren in Macedonia. Although many pretend to be exceedingly moved by the gruesome tales, not one of our civilized powers feels it its duty to put an end to these murders of men, women and children whose only crime is that they are Christian and refuse to give up their faith to please the Turks, who, to the disgrace of Christian Europe, are still allowed to do as they please almost within earshot of us.

The only hope of these poor people is that either the United States or England will interfere in their behalf. Really, when you read the reports from most reliable sources which are received here you feel ashamed to belong to a country who can listen to such stories of misery and still do nothing to put an end to these mad [illegible].

To give an idea of what is going on in the Balkans at the present time I shall here give a few authentic reports of some of the cruel deeds committed during the last two months, and I hope that these may arouse the great American people to compel their government to take action and come to the assistance of these unfortunates whom Christian Europe seems to have forgotten.

In the district of Tikvesh during the last six weeks more than twenty innocent Bulgarian Christians have been murdered. The murderers are well known to the Turkish police, but no action has been taken against them. The names of some of the murdered are Milan Christoff, Nicola [illegible], Theodore Kamtcheff and a twelve-year-old girl, Maria Ivanova.

Mito Dabitialy, from the village of Ban sko Strounishko, was murdered in his flour mill. The murderers are well known in the village. They have been pointed out, but are not arrested and punished.

In consequence of a Turk and a Turkish woman being attacked by armed men near the village of Bogdam the village has severely suffered. Several hundred Turks invaded it and committed the most unheard of outrages. Nearly all of the houses have been plundered, all of the peasants being severely beaten, and every young woman assaulted.

In the village of Trogritzi, [illegible] Pashoff was killed by Turks because he dared to attempt to run away when they surrounded his house. On the 7th of June between the villages of Toplin and Edinlertsi, [illegible] Ivanoff, twenty-four years old, was murdered. He was strapped in dozens of places and tortured in many ways before he died. Two other peasants, Kiro Ivanoff, and Lazo Christoff, who were attracted by his cries, were also killed.

The dungeon at Salonica is overfilled with prisoners. [illegible] more than 800 Bulgarian and Macedonian Christians from various parts of Macedonia [illegible] have not yet been tried. Besides these another 800 have been sentenced to from one to fifteen years imprisonment.

Reports like the above I could give by the hundreds, all of them written in the childlike language of these simple peasants, who, in spite of all have not yet lost the hope that their prayer for [illegible] Christian brethren will come to their assistance. Shall we let the disgrace of letting them [illegible] under the most cruel tortures go down in history?

CZAR'S IMPERIAL YACHT AROUSES KAISER'S ENVY

Czar Nicholas of Russia and Emperor William of Germany Meeting Aboard Former's Yacht on the Baltic.

After Visit to Brother Monarch's Magnificent Craft, Emperor William Lays Plans for Boat to Replace Hohenzollern.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—Since his return from his cruise in the Baltic and his meeting with the Czar on board the Russian imperial yacht it has been noticed that the Kaiser is no longer as well pleased with his own yacht, the Hohenzollern, as he used to be, although a few short months ago a great many changes were made on board this vessel to please his fancy. The fact is probably that the larger size and the far more magnificent fittings of the Czar's Danish built yacht put the Hohenzollern in the shade and it has therefore been no surprise to the people at court that the Kaiser [illegible] a new yacht [illegible] suggested that the Hohenzollern might be excellent as a hospital steamer for the German navy.

The great trouble, however, is that there is at present no more money in the German treasury than there has been for quite some time, that is to say next to nothing at all, and it is exceedingly unlikely that the Reichstag will make any large appropriations for the building of a vessel to suit the Kaiser's always extravagant requirements.

The meeting of the Emperor and Czar was a dramatic incident. The yachts drew close together in the dusk of a Sunday evening on the Baltic. The usual formalities were exchanged, and then the Kaiser went aboard the Czar's yacht. Later the Czar returned the visit, boarding the Hohenzollern. The monarchs spent about three hours together, while they discussed many important questions of state.

Paris, Aug. 26.—The lion in love is no new story, but it has just received a new interpretation here. A very fascinating Spanish dancer was performing in a music hall, where the lion was also being exhibited, and the animal was so charmed by the little woman that he roared and stamped about his cage, endeavoring to get at her and then putting his paws through the bars of the cage, took her head and patted it affectionately.

Unfortunately [illegible] had not clipped his claws, and the dancer received scratches on her face which are likely to permanently disfigure her. She has taken legal action against the proprietor of the music hall, claiming $200 damages.

PLAN TO KEEP ART TREASURES IN ENGLAND.

Purchase by Rich Americans of Rare Works Arouses Patriotic Englishmen, and Demand Is Made for Legislation

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 26.—The recent acquisition by an American collector of four first folios of Shakespeare's plays for the remarkable sum of $50,000 has strengthened the demand for legislation in the matter of exportation of art treasures.

The amount spent by the government annually on pictures and other works of art is as nothing when compared with the unlimited purses of American [illegible] and it is therefore evident that the [illegible] that remains open if private libraries and art treasures are to be retained in this country is legislation.

Italy protects her art treasures by prohibiting the exportation of any work of Italian origin without the permission of the government, and it was owing to this law that the attempted sale of the Borghese Titian, "Sacred and Profane Love," to America for an enormous sum of money by some said to be $1,000,000 was prevented. Why, therefore, it is asked, should not the British government make a similar law?

During the past season many of the finest canvasses have crossed the Atlantic. Of recent times the most notable instance is the sale to Mr. Altman of New York of Hoppner's Lady Louisa Manners, sold at Christie's for 14,050 guineas. In fact, the high prices paid for many of the pictures sold under the hammer are undoubtedly caused by the unlimited commissions from America. The famous Titian Ariosto, purchased last year for $150,000 by the British nation would in all probability have found a place in some American collection had not Mr. Astor, Mr. Beit and a few others generously subscribed $92,500 of it [illegible].

[illegible] valuable books are [illegible]. Of the seven Shakespeare [illegible] during the season, for an aggregate of nearly $2[illegible], six have been acquired on behalf of American collectors.

Germany, too, is in the field. The famous Peel Van Dyck's, sold a few years ago for $1[illegible]2,500, now hangs upon the walls of the Berlin Museum.

SCHOOLGIRL THROWN INTO PRISON AS A REVOLUTIONIST.

Diary She Kept Detailing the Errands She Did for an Elder Sister Puts Her in Odessa Jail With Criminals

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Odessa, Aug. 26.—Owing to the continuous arrests of all classes of Liberal citizens—lawyers, professors, doctors and journalists—the jails in Odessa are filled to overflowing. The principal jail has now some 1,400 prisoners, crowded into quarters designed for 600.

Among the suspects confined in the chief police station is a fourteen-year-old schoolgirl belonging to a highly respected family in Odessa. The unfortunate girl owes her arrest to having kept a schoolgirl diary, in which she faithfully recorded all the little happenings in her daily life. She has an elder sister who dabbles with revolutionary things and mixes with suspected persons. This sister often sent the youngster with a book to this person, and a paper to that one, or to fetch something from somebody else.

One night the gendarmerie came to the house, made a complete investigation of the apartment, examined all papers and books, and incidentally found the schoolgirl's diary. It contained a number of entries detailing all these little commissions executed for the elder sister. The diary was promptly seized and its little author, too, and she is now locked up in a filthy police station with all kinds of criminals.

WORK ON FASTEST LONG-DISTANCE R. R.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Brussels, Aug. 26.—Actual work has been started on the construction of the fastest long distance railroad in the world.

The road will be run from this city to Berlin via Cologne, and trains are to be run at a minimum speed of 120 miles an hour. The track will be without a single curve, and the motive power electricity.

The amount contributed by the Belgian government toward the cost of construction and equipment will be $11,250,000.

"OUR MARY" ANDERSON SOON TO SING IN PUBLIC AGAIN FOR CHARITY'S SAKE

MADAME MARY ANDERSON DE NAVARRO

MADAME DE NAVARRO VERY HAPPY WITH NEW BABY.

Famous American Actress Is Regaining Her Strength, and Says She Has All That Any Woman Could Ask For

London, Aug. 26.—Happy and contented as only a loving mother can be with the care of a sweet baby daughter, Madame Antonio de Navarro, formerly Miss Mary Anderson, the famous tragedienne, who is beloved by all Americans, is rapidly regaining her strength and from all reports will be able to accept her engagement to sing soon at a concert in the Town Hall, Evesham, Worcestershire, where the De Navarros are making their home. Madame de Navarro, since her marriage, has made it a rule not to appear in public functions, although she has been offered big sums by a [illegible] theatre [illegible] to do so. She [illegible] for sweet charity's sake a few times, once at the [illegible] where [illegible] for the benefit of [illegible] in Evesham for the benefit of local institutions.

Mary Anderson, as she will always be called by Americans, [illegible] refutation of the old saying that an actress can never be happy except before the footlights. [illegible] little daughter [illegible] weeks ago, she says that she has all and more than any woman could ask.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Berlin, Aug. 26.—The greatest passenger steamer ever built in Germany will be launched Tuesday at Stettin in the presence of the Kaiser, the Kaiserin and four English admirals.

"Augusta Victoria" is the name she will be christened when the Kaiser himself breaks the bottle on her prow.

The steamer, built for the Hamburg American Steamship Company, is expected to break all records between New York and Plymouth.

The Augusta Victoria has been in the hands of the ship makers since last November. She was then of only moderate capacity. Since then she has been split in two and had sixty-four feet added to her length.

The jubilee celebrations of the Hamburg American line are expected to take place aboard the Augusta Victoria.

"LEGISLATE" FRENCH BRAND OF TOBACCO

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 26.—To create a popular tobacco is the ambition of a deputy who has brought a bill into the Chamber to that effect. He wants to make an entirely indigenous tobacco to cost $1 a kilo, or five cents for the small packet commonly sold. It is well known that the tobaccos sold by the Government monopoly are extraordinary melanges, the most common tobacco containing 29 per cent of Kentucky tobacco, 8 per cent of Maryland, 8 per cent of Ohio, 10 per cent of Hungarian, the rest being made up of leaves grown in Algeria and several French provinces, the so-called superior being 45 per cent of foreign plant, [illegible] per cent Kentucky and 20 per cent Maryland, the rest being from the French provinces. The question is whether the new tobacco which the patriot wants to be smoked will be smokable, much of the French is not.

WIFE GUARDIAN OF A DUCAL PRODIGAL

Special Cable to Sunday American.

Paris, Aug. 26.—Prince de Sagan, now Duc de Talleyrand, has for some years been in a condition of tutelage, that is to say he is not allowed to administer his estate himself, on account of past extravagances, a measure sometimes applied for under similar circumstances by wealthy French families. In the present circumstances the administratrix is the Duchesse, his wife.

His representative in Silesia, Count Boniface de Hatzfeld, has applied to the Seine courts to obtain the ratification of an act which he had passed before a local notary on behalf of the Prince. He had previously asked the Duchesse to assemble a family council to approve the act, but the Duchesse refused, and that is why the matter came before the courts. [illegible] and we see the curious position of a ducal prodigal who is not allowed to increase his property.

KLEPTOMANIAC IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Special Cable to Sunday American.

London, Aug. 26.—There is a sneak thief or an evident kleptomaniac in the House of Commons and the police have been unable to trap him. He is stealing the hats of members. Usually members wore their hats in Commons, but during the present season [illegible] many hang them on the rack in the members' dressing room.

That the hats have not been taken by mistake is evident from the fact that other hats have not been left in substitution for them. It is said that one hat which its owner placed beside him on a bench in the very chamber of the House of Commons had vanished when, on leaving the House, he looked around to take it up.

The practical joker or hat thief has not confined his attentions to the members of any particular party. During the week [illegible] and the [illegible] have been [illegible] home from the House of Commons without their hats.

Woman's Kidney Troubles

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Is Especially Successful In Curing This Fatal Disease.

Mrs. J. W. Lang and Mrs. S. Frake

Of all the diseases known, with which women are afflicted, kidney disease is the most fatal. In fact, unless early and correct treatment is applied, the weary patient seldom survives.

Being fully aware of this, Mrs. Pinkham, early in her career, gave exhaustive study to the subject, and in producing her great remedy for woman's ills—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—was careful to see that it contained the correct combination of herbs which was sure to control that fatal disease, woman's kidney troubles. The Vegetable Compound acts in harmony with the laws that govern the entire female system, and while there are many so called remedies for kidney troubles, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the only one especially prepared for women, and thousands have been cured of serious kidney derangements by it. Derangements of the feminine organs quickly affect the kidneys, and when a woman has such symptoms as pain or weight in the loins, backache, bearing down pains, urine too frequent, scanty or high colored, producing scalding or burning, or deposits like brick dust in it; unusual thirst, swelling of hands and feet, swelling under the eyes or sharp pains in the back running down the inside of her groin, she may be sure her kidneys are affected and should lose no time in combating the disease with Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, the woman's remedy for woman's ills.

Mrs. Samuel Frake, of Prospect Plains, N. J., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

I cannot thank you enough for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. When I first wrote to you I had suffered for years with what the doctor called kidney trouble [illegible] Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound [illegible] thankful to say it has entirely cured me [illegible] have disappeared.

I cannot praise your medicine enough, and would advise all women suffering with kidney trouble to try it.

Mrs. J. W. Lang, of 626 Third Avenue, New York, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

I have been a great sufferer with kidney trouble. My back ached all the time and I was discouraged. I heard that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would cure kidney disease, and I began to take it, and it has cured me when everything else had failed. I have recommended it to lots of people and they all praise it very highly.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation.

Women suffering from kidney trouble, or any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Out of the great volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than likely she has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

Rev. Lewis E. Pease's Famous Sermon Which Stirred Nashua to Its Depths

NASHUA, N. H., Aug. 26.—In a recent sermon which stirred Nashua to its very depths and in which he vigorously combatted some old-fashioned religious opinions, Rev. Lewis E. Pease described a class of people in Nashua "Who Ought to Go to Hell."

Rev. Mr. Pease does not hold to the idea of a hell of eternal suffering. Instead he maintains it is a condition of mind and soul made possible by sin. Therefore he believes that every Christian in Nashua ought to go to hell for the express purpose of rescuing those whose state of mind and soul keeps them confined there.

Mr. Pease is pastor of the First Universalist Church and has had considerable success in his work. His sermon follows:

The Sunday Sermon.

"In a classification of the most short-sighted people in the universe theologians would be accorded a place of distinction. After reading the history of theological discussion one comes to the conclusion that only a small minority of the so-called leaders of religious thought have been men of great intellectual insight.

"Bitter creedal spirit has taken the place of the sympathetic heart throbs of the Christ. The church has been split into fragments over the discussion of a few Greek roots, and little selfish heavens and hells have been created by narrow minded [illegible]. To these conceptions thousands of men and women have clung in [illegible] fear [illegible] some who [illegible] as God's [illegible] are the same relation to the simple loving spirit of Christ that a paper flower bears to an American beauty rose.

"Pulpit and pew have fought with almost deathless tenacity to defend religious dogma. The [illegible] between heretic and Christian has been boldly set up, and the fate of the other fellow glibly foretold by the saintly few who were wise enough to set a bound to a Heavenly Father's infinite love.

"Pulpits have blinked at flagrant sins right in the same [illegible], while defending in the [illegible] of ignorance and fanatical zeal a lot of [illegible] foolishness which was an insult to the love of God and the reasoning faculty of man.

Class That Should Go to Hell

"My subject is, 'A class of people in Nashua who ought to go to hell.' In order to make my meaning clear I shall endeavor to knock the foundation out of the heaven and hell which have been set up by men and attributed to God. Speaking broadly, it is hard to determine which is the more selfish in spirit, this heaven with its harp players enjoying themselves while their brothers and sisters suffer in hell, or the hell itself. While one is more comfortable in its atmosphere than the other, is not the spirit of each equally selfish?

"I am ready to announce, and to stand by the statement, that the popular idea of both heaven and hell is wrong. Personally I am as truly a believer in hell as I am in heaven. I believe that no man can get into heaven who does not deserve to go there, and that no man can get out of hell so long as its spirit burns within his breast.

"I do not care a rap who you, my hearers, are denominationally, for a sectarian label will pass no man into heaven.

"What is hell? I ask those in this mixed congregation, who know but little about the religion of the [illegible] you ever [illegible] your belief about hell? Do I hear you say, 'I cannot believe in a lake of literal fire for sinners, because a God of such a hell would not fill out my idea of a Heavenly Father, and such unceasing punishment would be merciless and reasonless.'

"Take, then, another teaching about hell and consider it. After reason and love put out the fires in the Calvinistic hell this never ceasing mental-anguish doctrine of hell took its place with a class of people whose idea of the Christian religion necessitates that there shall be in God's universe a place in which everlasting anguish of some sort shall exist.

Condition of Mind and Soul.

"Think what it would mean for God to shut a man up in mental anguish throughout millions of years and to keep aloof from him, however much he might plead for forgiveness. Bear in mind that eternity is long and mental anguish terrible even for one hour's duration. Do I hear you answer, 'I do not believe such a doctrine of hell; it seems unlike the spirit of God to me?'

"You are ready, then, to hear about a doctrine of hell which will be as true in a thousand years from to-day as it is now. That doctrine is: Hell is a condition of mind and soul made possible by sin. This hell will exist as long as sin exists. Men must suffer in it until they pay the full penalty of their sins. Such a hell knows no time limit. It is a thing of the present and of the future. It is localized wherever sin is, in your heart, in your home, in your city. It is a real hell. One of broken hopes, palsied wills, despairing hearts, anger, hate and murder. Wretchedness, misery and anguish are there. In it are dissipated, ragged, homeless, loveless men and women.

"To the first statement, 'Hell is a condition of mind and soul made possible by sin,' I add another. It is this: 'The thing to do for a man in hell is to get him out.'

Professed Christians the Class.

"It is no more the work of the teacher to help the ignorant, the physician to heal the sick, than it is for the church to rescue the sinful—those in the actual hell which is burning day by day; and the class of people in Nashua who ought to go to hell are the professed Christians. This is their Christ-appointed mission to rescue men and women from the misery and despair of sin.

"Just so long as they sit in their little sect-made quarters and think of hell as a far-away place with which they have nothing to do but to escape it the organized church will be weak. Weak, because Christians do not care enough about the souls of the perishing to go out after them. Weak because men and women too often regard their Christian duty as done when they attend church, hire sittings and listen to sermon and song. All pleasant enough to do if the sermon and song are entertaining, but it is not aggressive Christianity.

"'Go to hell' should be said to every Christian. Go and rescue your brother from darkness and sin. Go, believing that the power of God is stronger than the power of evil. How long would the forces of sin triumph to the extent which they do in this city if the Christians from each denomination were to unite with [illegible] purpose to fight the wrong? When the gypsy moths threatened our beautiful foliage a [illegible] effort [illegible] time and money was [illegible] to save our trees from destruction. Of how much more value is a man's soul than a maple tree.

Half-Hearted Christianity

"Here in this community are men and women running their sectarian plants and defending their special interpretations concerning the doctrine of a future hell while real hells in which hopes are being [illegible] and lives [illegible] go on [illegible] from day to day. Men are lost while a half-hearted Christianity looks on and accepts for the city the [illegible] which come from these places of iniquity. Lost because there is not enough of the life of Christ in the churches to cause them as men and women to stand ready for the right, and to put up an aggressive fight against the sins which lead men down to despair.

"Into this materialistic age, this dollar god age, must be breathed the spirit of God as it was manifested in his son Jesus Christ. Superstitious fear, profitless theological discussions, vaudeville church finance and cowardly pulpits must go, and the distinct message of the Gospel, 'Repent, believe and be baptized,' be spoken with no uncertain sound.

"God loved us while as yet we were sinners, and Christ came to save that which was lost. Then may we not say that God, Christ and every soul that is filled with love divine will forever reach out to help any man or woman whose feet wander in the paths of sin, until he or she, tired of soul hunger and despair, seeks the Heavenly Father who awaits with compassionate kiss each prodigal's return?"

Globe Opens To-morrow Night With "The Grafter"—Boston and Park Open Saturday

Globe Theatre

It will seem strange to see "Hap" Ward without at the same time seeing his former partner in the firm of Ward & Vokes. They were so long together that it is difficult for the mind to disassociate them, and it will be interesting to watch their separate tours. "Hap" Ward will be the first to be seen here, his new play, "The Grafter," being announced for the next two weeks at the Globe Theatre, commencing to-morrow night. It need only be said for "The Grafter" that it is along lines made familiar by Mr. Ward as the producer of all the past Ward & Vokes offerings. The new piece, however, is promised to have a distinctly legitimate farce value and to tell an amusing story as well as introduce a programme of musical numbers especially written for the production. The company is one of fifty people and contains many well known players.

Keith's Theatre

With the return of the regular season, the patrons of Keith's are afforded the opportunity of witnessing an exceptionally strong variety program. The headline attraction is to be the Colonial Septet, consisting of four men and three women, in a handsome musical play of three scenes representing an old time hallow'en.

The surrounding show contains a number of acts never before seen here and others who have been absent from this city for longer or shorter periods. The most prominent in the former will be Berzac's circus, the latest European booking for the Keith circuit, which has never before been seen in this country, one of its prominent features being a revolving table on which a horse rides with apparent ease. Others on the program will be Spissel Brothers and Mack, a trio of exceptionally clever comedy acrobats; Dixon and Anger, "the Baron and his friend," in a crossfire talking specialty; Jane Courthope and company, in the farcical sketch, "A Fisherman's Luck;" Thompson and Vidocq, conversational comedians; Mizzi Von Wenzl, Tyrolean warbler; Mark Sullivan, monologue comedian and singer; Staley and Brockman, in vocal specialties and imitations; and the Castanoos, whirlwind dancers.

Tremont Theatre

"The College Widow," in the first week of its stay at the Tremont, has already made something of a hot weather record in turning people away at every performance. The play caught the public's fancy at the start and the many reports of its excellence as an entertainment were speedily substantiated. With such a flying start it is a fair prediction that "The College Widow" engagement will be the most notable of any in the already strong list of Mr. Savage's successes here. Mr. Ade's comedy gives general satisfaction because it has such a diversity of good points. Those familiar with the smaller college towns will recall the prototypes of many of its characters, but every one will find them genuinely funny and understandable.

Grand Opera House

"Custer's Last Fight," an historical melodrama from the pen of Hal Reid, will be the attraction at the Grand Opera House the coming week. It is written around one of the most romantic battles in the history of the United States, and embodies in its story the heroes of the Indian wars. The scenes are laid in the wild Western country in 1876. The introduction of real Indians, cowboys, scouts and soldiers, with their horses, ponies and dogs, should insure enough excitement to please the most exacting lover of thrilling melodrama. The story of the play deals directly with the incidents leading up to General Custer's "last stand" of the battle itself. The production is said to be elaborate.

Howard Athenaeum

Crane Brothers and Bellman and Moore will furnish the leading feature acts in the Howard's vaudeville bill the coming week. The Crane boys will present for the first time at the Howard their new skit, "The Mud Town Minstrels," and Bellman and Moore will repeat their character change act which won so much favor at the Howard last season. Then there will be the World's Comedy Four—a quartette of clever comedians and singers. Another strong act will be that of Le Roy and La Vanion, comedy horizontal bar performers. Pook and Treak in an acrobatic novelty act will also be a feature, as will Florence and Charles Gregson in a song and dance act.

Among the others will be the Maxsmith duo, in feats of jugglery, unsupported ladder balancing and club swinging; Annie Morris, soubrette; Edesion, equilibrist; Kane, a feature ventriloquist; McAvoy and Hughes, Irish comedians.

Empire Theatre

The Summer season at the Empire Theatre ends with this week and the management announces as the final attraction H. A. Du Souchet's laughable farce comedy, "The Man from Mexico," which has not been seen in Boston since its performances by the Castle Square Theatre stock company four seasons ago. Walter C. Perkins, who appeared in the last production of the play here, has been specially engaged for his original character of Benjamin Fitzhew.

In the coming performances of the farce at the Empire Theatre the stage settings, designed for the original production, will be duplicated.

Boston Theatre

The dramatic season of 1905-06 at the Boston Theatre will start off next Saturday evening with the engagement of that famous farceur and comic opera star, De Wolf Hopper, in DeKoven and Ranken's latest comic opera, "Happyland." The piece has been rehearsed for over a month, and it is fair to anticipate for the Boston premier production a smooth and altogether satisfactory performance. Associated with Mr. Hopper in the cast will be such other favorites as George Frothingham, William Danforth, John Dunsmuir, Marguerite Clark and Ada Deaves.

De Wolf Hopper has for the star role a character quite unique and from all accounts altogether comical. It is that of Ecstatic, King of Elysia, a mythical monarch with a ruler possessed of powers most autocratic.

Seats will go on sale to-morrow morning. There will be a special Labor Day matinee.

Park Theatre

"Faith Mather," a modern American drama, by a Boston lawyer, M. Douglas Flattery, will be presented at the Park Theatre on Saturday night for the first time on any stage. But little is known about the story of the play except that it deals in high finance, and a stupendous bond robbery, and that the locale is Boston. An exceptionally strong and well-balanced company of actors have been engaged for this production. Margaret Pitt, who will appear in the title role, is a daughter of the late Henry Pitt, one of the best known of the famous Boston Museum Stock Company.

FLORENCE GREGSON AT THE HOWARD

MIZZI VON WENZL AT KEITH'S.

Hollis Street Theatre

The regular season at the Hollis will open a week from to-morrow, on Labor Day, with the new comedy, "The Heir to the Hoorah." It is a Western play and the scenes, characters and atmosphere are said to be distinctly of the new country and the mines. It is claimed, however, that it is not a "wild and woolly" fabric.

Guy Bates Post, who did such admirable work as Steve in "The Virginian," will be seen in the leading role, Joe Lacy, and a company chosen particularly to fit the characters drawn by Mr. Armstrong will appear at the Hollis.

Colonial Theatre

The return of Wright Lorimer and his sumptuous production of "The Shepherd King" to Boston for a single week's engagement at the Colonial Theatre, a week from to-morrow, will be welcomed by hundreds of people who saw this play when it was presented in this city on its previous engagements, and by still other hundreds who were not so fortunate. Mr. Lorimer and his play and his truly magnificent production created a most favorable impression. As for the presentation it can be safely said that with the possible exception of "Ben Hur" nothing like it has ever been seen on the American stage.

Bowdoin Square Theatre

"The Streets of New York," that famous old-time comedy-drama, is to have a scenic revival at the Bowdoin Square Theatre the coming week. It has always been popular at the Bowdoin, and should prove a drawing attraction for the closing week of the Summer season. During the performance will be interpolated song pleasing novelties and specialty numbers. All the scenery is to be new, including the Union square night scene, the fire scene and the old Bowery.

Palace Theatre

The regular season at the Palace Theatre will begin to-morrow with the appearance of the Trocadero Burlesquers. This company, now in its fifth season, has built up a reputation as one of the best burlesque organizations on the road, and comprises a number of capable comedians, good singers and a bevy of pretty girls. Two burlesques will be given, "Doping the Winner" and "A Saintly Sinner." The star feature of the olio is Brinn, the sensational juggler, who plays with big naval projectiles and a cannon.

Columbia Music Hall

The offering at the Columbia for the week commencing to-morrow will be Miner's Merry Burlesquers, presenting a series of surprises in the way of comedy, vaudeville and burlesque. The Merry Burlesquers, while comparatively new, will be found to rank with the best, and theatregoers will find in it many new faces and vaudeville acts of the most enjoyable kind.

Castle Square Theatre

The regular Fall and Winter season at the Castle Square Theatre will begin a week from to-morrow with a Labor Day holiday matinee. The play will be "Old Heidelberg," and it will be presented by the Castle Square Stock Company, which then begins its ninth consecutive season at that house.

The stock company at the Castle Square Theatre will be the strongest in the history of the theatre, and one of the largest organizations of its kind in the country. It will be headed by John Craig and Lillian Kemble. Other members of the company will include Florence Kahn, Mary Young, Marion Balou, John Waldron, Mark Kent, Edward Wade and Sports[illegible] Aiken.

The subscription sale of seats will be continued at the Castle Square as in former seasons. The box office will be open on and after to-morrow morning.

Austin & Stone's Museum

Bostonians need not take the long trip down the James River to see the old plantation darkey, for Austin & Stone have brought a whole car load right to their doors. They have now got over the effects of their sea trip and this week Turner's Southern Serenaders are prepared to give New Englanders a further insight into their life in the cotton fields and on the levees of the Sunny South. There are [illegible] singers, dancers and comedians. The show they give is one of the most realistic ever seen in this city.

Lyceum Theatre

The attraction at the Lyceum the coming week will be furnished by the High Rollers Company, which will appear this season with a new and elaborate scenic and costume outfit. Two burlesques will be given, enlisting the full strength of the company of comedians and pretty girls.

Paragon Park

The last week at Paragon Park, which closes for the season on Labor Day, promises to be one of the most interesting of the entire season. A striking bill has been prepared and the free open air circus [illegible] will doubtless be [illegible] [illegible] for [illegible].

Speedy, the highest of high divers, has been retained for the closing week and will repeat every afternoon and evening his feat of jumping 100 feet through the air into a tank of water 3½ feet deep.

Point of Pines

The coming week is the last of the season at the Point of Pines, for Labor Day, September 4, the Pines will close. The last week promises to be an eventful one. To-morrow will be bargain day and the price of all [illegible] will be five cents up to 6 p. m., just one-half the usual price. The same show will be given as any other day in the week.

The bill in the rustic theatre for the closing week will be the musical farce comedy, "[illegible]," with Phil Ott in the leading role. There will be a supporting company of comedians and pretty girls who can both sing and dance, while the action of the piece is rapid and it is full of fun.

Norumbega Park

This is a particularly good time of the year to see the animals in the zoological garden at Norumbega Park in their best condition. By this time coats of fur have been shed and the new ones clothe them [illegible]. There are all kinds of attractions at the park and the vaudeville [illegible] over by 10 in the evening, giving ample opportunity for witnessing the display of the electrical fountain and enjoying the other features of the [illegible] before taking the trolley trip back.

In the covered open air theatre the coming week the vaudeville program will be headed by the Dominoes Quartet, four colored comedians who will present all the latest songs.

Lexington Park

A new fad in going to Lexington Park is to make up evening trolley trip parties and charter a special car for the ride out through the historic scenes of Lexington to the brilliantly illuminated park. All the season Lexington Park has been a favorite retreat for club outings and picnic parties, who have taken special cars for the trip.

Features are the band concerts by Lenna Claire Bowers' women's band, roller skating in the hippodrome, the toboggan slide, the merry-go-round, the observation tower, the zoological garden, bear pit, deer park [illegible], bowling alleys, monkey house, electric arcade and women's cottage.

JAP TERMS REJECTED BY CZAR.

Russians at Conference Say No to the Mikado's Latest Proposal for Peace.

ADJOURNMENT TAKEN UNTIL TO-MORROW

Unless Komura Then Has Other Concessions to Make, the Negotiations Cease.

WILL MEAN WAR TO BITTER END IN EAST

By J. Frank Davis.

Hotel Wentworth, Newcastle, N. H., Aug. 26.—The peace conference will come to an end on Monday afternoon, unless Japan offers additional concessions. Baron Komura will go no further in his modification of terms unless he is ordered to do so by the Mikado himself. That is the gloomy condition of the peace conference. The diplomatic cord has been stretched almost to the breaking point. It remains only for Japan to say that she has made her best offer and the conference is over.

Russia submitted no counter proposition at to-day's session of the conference. Witte merely obeyed the instructions of St. Petersburg, which were to reiterate to Japan in [illegible] language what he has so often said in private, "Not one kopeck for indemnity."

KOMURA ASKS REPLY.

[illegible] insist ent that Witte and Rosen shall not even discuss the cession of Russian territory or indemnity. Witte's request was refused. St. Petersburg instructed him to proceed along the lines already laid out. [illegible] the high est [illegible] Witte's entourage.

But for the request of Baron Komura the conference would have [illegible] and the protocols which had been agreed over from the former sessions were signed by all four envoys.

Then Komura requested a reply to his proposition [illegible] Wednesday that Japan should waive her claim to the Russian ships interned in neutral ports [illegible] power in the Far East and to the principle of indemnity. In return for which Russia would purchase the northern half of the Island of Saghalien for $1,200,000,000 [illegible]

[illegible] Witte informed the Japanese that he had no more explicit reply to make than that he had made on Wednesday—that it was impossible for Russia to consider any proposition which looked toward the reimbursement of Japan for the expenses of the war, under any guise, or the cession of territory.

END APPEARS NEAR.

The envoys sat for a moment. The peace conference was within a few [illegible]

Then Baron Komura, in the same quiet way in which he presented a break two weeks ago to-day, by asking that the [illegible] adjourn until Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock, giving as his reason that he desired to consult with his Government upon the existing [illegible] It was the natural [illegible] courtesy that the [illegible] granted.

M. Witte was [illegible] when he alighted from [illegible] at the hotel an hour later [illegible] to the group of newspaper correspondents.

"The protocols have been signed," he said. "After that Baron Komura asked for another session. His request was granted. It [illegible] Monday."

"Was a [illegible] proposition made by Russia?"

"None of any kind. There is no change in the Russian [illegible]"

"Will new propositions be made on Monday?"

"Perhaps [illegible] the Japanese. I do not know their purpose in asking for the adjournment. It may be they will make another proposal."

CHIEF ENVOYS CONFER.

An important feature of the new movement [illegible] to-day is the fact that before [illegible] the conference building M. Witte and Baron Komura were closeted together in a private room for [illegible] This is the first private conference between the chief envoys that has been held since their arrival here.

Mr. Sato, in discussing the situation, said:

"I do not know what is to be proposed. The plan is still in the minds of the plenipotentiaries."

LAW IS STAYED, AWAITS BIRTH OF BABY.

Hackett Girl Murder Mystery Remains Unsolved, and Legal Action Is Checked by the Condition of Mrs. Raymond

SHE ALONE WATCHED BY THE AUTHORITIES

Satisfactory Evidence of Her Whereabouts on the Night of Tragedy Has Not Yet Been Ascertained by the Officials

Special to the Sunday American.

Readfield, Me., Aug. 26.—Legal action to avenge the murder of Mattie Hackett is waiting—for what?

The birth of a baby.

Mrs. Elsie Hobbs Raymond, the only person who has not produced evidence satisfying to the officials of her whereabouts at the hour when Mattie Hackett was being strangled to death a few rods from her home; Mrs. Raymond, who was supposedly jealous of her husband's trivial attentions to Mattie Hackett, will, within a few days pass through that ordeal by which alone woman arrives at the divine estate of motherhood.

And here, in the shadow of death the law stays its avenging hand and awaits, as a signal for action, the first tiny cry of a human being newly born into this strange world of laughter and sorrow.

Where else in the records of men and women, is there a story of such pathos and tragedy as this?

That ordeal of motherhood safely passed, Mrs. Raymond may then be called upon to face a [illegible] crying one newly [illegible] by the glory of maternity [illegible] be brought face to face with a judge and jury [illegible] Mattie Hackett was struggling in the fatal embrace of a strangler who crept up on her with the [illegible]

Under Eyes of Guard

The hand of the law is [illegible] the [illegible] of the law have still their [illegible] all waiting; the agents of the law are always, always within reach of her [illegible] a year and a half with her husband. There is [illegible] no ostentatious display [illegible] but watchful eyes always [illegible] She knows it; she talks freely of the case [illegible] refutes the consideration shown to her at that most vital moment of her life.

What is the evidence in the case?

Mrs. Raymond was missing from her home at that moment when Mattie Hackett was strangled to death within sound of her father's voice. Mrs. Raymond says she was in the orchard back of her house. The officials are not satisfied with her story.

Presumably Mrs. Raymond had a cause to be jealous of Mattie Hackett. She declared she was jealous of any woman feeling safe in her husband's love.

Footprints of a woman were found in a field where the slayer may have run away from her victim. These are nine and one-half inches long. Mrs. Hackett's shoes measure ten inches.

Mattie Hackett was seen at some time between 8:10 and 8:30 o'clock. The officials will stand on the theory that a woman soon to become a mother could walk two miles from her home to the Hackett homestead between 7:45 o'clock, when Mrs. Raymond left her house, according to witnesses, and 8:30 o'clock, the latest possible moment.

Two Miles to Hackett's House.

Every indication is that the murder actually happened at five or ten minutes past eight o'clock. Horsemen say that it is all they can do to drive a good horse the two miles, uphill, from the Raymond home to the Hackett home in twenty minutes.

Now the questions are:

Will a jury consider the official theory with its minor ramifications and subtle corroborations sufficient to convict a woman of the murder?

Will a jury accept a strange mental condition of a woman about to become a mother as one of murderous intent?

HOW PRETTY MATTIE HACKETT WAS SLAIN BY A STRANGLER

By Warren Blair Davis.

Readfield, Me., Aug. 26.—Some day in the distant future, when Mattie Hackett's death is remembered only in the haziest manner by the oldest inhabitants of Kent's Hill, a rich man will take possession of all the territory which in the last week has been described in all parts of the country. He will build a fine house and lay out spacious grounds. His estate will be the envy of all who pass it by. When it is completed the rich man will bring all his friends to see.

He will take them out on his broad verandas and he will sweep his arm over the sight in front of them on either side of them and he will ask:

"Where in the whole United States will you find another such sight as this?"

BIG SQUADRON IS BARELY SAVED FROM WRECK.

Entire North Atlantic Fleet Would Have Struck Reef Had Not the Iowa Collided with Brenton Reef Lightship

WARSHIPS GOT ON WRONG TACK IN FOG

Proceeding in Direct Line for Rocks When Battleship, Leading, Ran Into Signal Ship, Little Harm Resulting

Newport, Aug. 26.—The arrival today of Captain Fogarty of the Brenton's Reef lightship disclosed the fact that the entire North Atlantic squadron had been saved from piling itself on the rocks of the treacherous reef by a collision of the Iowa with the lightship which smashed off its stem and carried away its [illegible] gear, while the battleship was herself escaped sending the lightship and her crew of seven to the bottom [illegible] only some streaks of paint from her bow.

It was a collision for which not only Captain Tyler of the Iowa but every one of the officers and crews of the entire squadron had reason to thank their lucky stars.

The vessels of the squadron at the time of the collision were proceeding at slow speed and without the least idea of the proper course. The Iowa was leading the way in a direct line for the reefs that showed their teeth in boiling white surf not half a mile from where the lightship was anchored.

Thick Fog Prevailed.

It was last Thursday that the accident saved the warships, but the officers and crews of the ships down to the last man had maintained a discreet silence regarding their narrow escape from a colossal disaster. Probably the startling incident would still be an official secret but for the disclosure made by Captain Fogarty, who landed in a whaleboat for material to repair the lightship temporarily until another can replace her on the station.

There was a thick fog on when the squadron left here last Thursday and pointed for the open sea to engage in target practice and squadron evolutions. Before the ships had fairly [illegible] the mouth of the harbor all idea of the course was lost [illegible] were pointing as [illegible] believed, for the broad Atlantic. As a matter of fact the course had been changed too quickly.

The pilot, steering by dead reckoning, supposed that the vessels had passed south of the Beaver Tail and laid his course east southeast. Instead the squadron at this time had [illegible] on the starboard and the change in the course pointed all the vessels directly toward the cruel line of rocks marking Brenton's Reef that stretches [illegible] toward Graves Point, the point that juts out into the Atlantic marking the south extreme end of Narragansett Bay, where it mingles with the brine of the ocean.

Saved Day for Squadron.

The lightship alone saved the day for the squadron. It was 5 in the afternoon and the fog blanket had settled down thicker than ever when Captain Fogarty suddenly saw the white bows of the Iowa close aboard of the lightship, on the starboard bow. The whistle of the light vessel had been blowing stentorian blasts at ten seconds intervals. Running forward the captain saw the big white vessel towering above him. The next instant, before he could hail the bow of the Iowa crashed in the stem of the anchored lightship and cut it off from the thick planked forecastle head to the water's edge.

All of the headgear of the lightship, her short bowsprit and bobstays, were carried away, while the snapping of the fore stay saved the foremast from going over board. The warship only scratched her paint, for the impact did not so much as dent her bowplates. She rapidly sheered saw the shadowy form in the gray mist off and rounded to, while the astonished crew of the lightship stood agape, as they disappear before their eyes.

Special to the Sunday American.

Readfield, Me., Aug. 26.—With the flesh of his face and hands shrivelling and cracking from the heat of flames which burst out all around him, Robert Boutwell of Boston and Malden, plunged on through smoke and fire-filled corridors of the Hotel Maranacook, smashing at doors and shouting to rouse sleeping guests, until finally driven to bay by the flames he leaped from a window. Despite his heroism one whole family of three was lost, and now he lies dangerously injured. His life may pay the forfeit.

Those who were burned to death in the fire which destroyed this famous Summer hotel were Mr. and Mrs. Edward A. Martin of No. 64 Congreve street, Roslindale, Boston. Had it not been for the frantic heroism of Mr. Boutwell, who is only nineteen years old, it is probable that many others of the twenty-three guests of the hotel and twenty employes asleep there would have lost their lives.

Twice within forty-eight hours young Boutwell risked his life to save others. From a steamer bound from Boston on Thursday night he leaped into the ocean and rescued a young woman who was drowning. Here he took his life in his hands again, and now lies blinded for life, probably even if he recovers. He is terribly burned about the body, his hands and arms are in a fearful condition still

APPEAL TO ROCKEFELLER TO END WAR.

Paris, Aug. 26.—The Matin has cabled to-night the following remarkable appeal to John D. Rockefeller at Cleveland:

"The question of money threatens to unloose afresh and with redoubled violence the scourge of war. President Roosevelt is making noble and heroic efforts to end a struggle between two nations whose populations amount to one-seventh of the entire population of the globe.

"The question arises as to whether another American would share the glory of President Roosevelt and complete this work by overcoming the sole obstacle now hindering peace. He would thus demonstrate the might of money in powerful and generous hands."

PRISON INQUIRY STARTLES VERMONT.

"TRUSTY" HAD ACCESS TO THE DEATH CELL

Woman Made Written Confession to the Matron, Telling How She Removed Lock on Inner Door with Scissors

Bellows Falls, Vt., Aug. 26.—The [illegible] committee now investigating [illegible] of Vermont [illegible] by the first series of hearings in [illegible] which is revealing astounding conditions of immorality. It is declared, in the State Prison at Windsor, including particularly a plot to enable Mary Rogers to escape the gallows. It has been shown that certain prison officials were a party to this amazing plot. It has been testified that a prison "trusty" had access to the cell of the condemned woman [illegible] when she was in [illegible] in the very shadow of the gallows.

At the session Matron Durkee testified in regard to a confession she secured from Mrs. Rogers about this plot. Mrs. Rogers was under sentence of death. She was locked in a cell to which no one but Matron Durkee, the prison warden [illegible]. Yet with a duplicate key [illegible] Rogers [illegible] Mary Rogers obtained admission to her cell, not only once, but "as often as he wanted to," he is quoted as telling the witness.

Removed Lock With Scissors.

[illegible] Rogers [illegible] said [illegible] of Mrs. Rogers [illegible] out that Mrs. Rogers took off the lock of the inner door to her cell by means of a pair of scissors, with which she removed the screws fastening the lock to the door.

Matron Durkee, who testified to Mrs. Rogers's confession, [illegible] and that she became aware [illegible] Mrs. Rogers [illegible].

To-day Sheriff Peck testified and Matron Durkee also testified [illegible] especially in regard to the [illegible] in which Mrs. Rogers made her confession [illegible] Rogers.

Resume Hearing Friday.

After the hearing was concluded to-day the investigation was adjourned until Friday, when it will again be taken up at Young's Hotel in Boston. At that hearing a number of depositions will be taken that will have a [illegible] this case.

The [illegible] light regarding [illegible] to conjectures as to what action [illegible] regarding the matter [illegible] this connection [illegible] Sheriff Peck [illegible] man who is most [illegible] is mentioned as the subject of possible discipline.

The Sheriff was absent when the committee started to find out about the conspiracy of a condemned woman to cheat the hangman.

When he was asked the cause of his absence from the city he declared that he did not know [illegible] him. He seemed rather nervous [illegible] when he took the stand.

On the witness stand Mrs. Durkee made this statement:

"The statement made by Mrs. Rogers was written in her room with no one else present. I gave her the paper and other materials. I did not tell her what to write nor intimate whom she might bring into the scandal. I did not see the statement until it was finished and Mrs. Rogers gave it to me.

"I read it over and gave it to the superintendent. It was about the same thing that Mrs. Rogers had told me. I talked it over with her a number of times after that, and she did not alter it in any way. At the present time she never speaks of it to me. She is in a cell now where it is impossible for anything of the kind to happen again."

In Cell About 20 Minutes.

On the witness stand to-day Sheriff Peck told about the visit of a Miss Bachelder to Mrs. Rogers in her cell when it was supposed that no outsider could see her. The sheriff told [illegible] Miss Bachelder [illegible] by Mrs. Rogers [illegible].

"My deputy, Mr. Lovell, sat on the bed and I sat in a chair near the door. The conversation was general, nothing in particular being said. I think Miss Bachelder told Mrs. Rogers she was going to have a reprieve or something like that.

"So far as I know it was the first notice of a reprieve, for I had not got the official papers then. I don't think Lovell said anything at the time.

"I have an idea we were in there fifteen or twenty minutes, after which we went back to the guardroom."

"Did you know what Miss Bachelder came for?"

"Was there any other reason for her being there except to see Mrs. Rogers?"

"[illegible] to see the State's Attorney. [illegible] he went up to Miss Durkee's room to wait until Charles Bachelder came. I think she made a remark she was going to wait for Charles to come."

Memory at Fault.

"Who had the sole control and power of admitting people to the execution of Mrs. Rogers?"

"The sheriff."

"Was [illegible] received from Miss B[illegible] from you [illegible] be present at the execution of Mrs. Rogers?"

"Didn't Miss Bachelder say, 'It pays to keep on the right side of a sheriff'?"

"I can't say."

"Do you deny these things?"

"No, because I cannot remember."

"[illegible]"

"[illegible] I would [illegible] I have nothing to keep back."

"Did you go away from court last week and out of the State [illegible] being summoned here?"

"When did you go away?"

"A week ago."

DIVORCE ISSUE IS FUTURE OF CHILDREN.

Judge in Taggart Case Says Custody of the Little Ones Is of Far Greater Importance Than Granting of Decree

PARENTS ARE ABLE TO CARE FOR THEMSELVES

Wooster, O., Aug. 26.—In the hearing of the Taggart divorce case to-day, Judge Eason, in ruling on an objection by counsel to the admission of testimony in regard to Mrs. Taggart's character and her life in Wooster, said:

"The granting of the divorce in this case is not of as much importance as the custody of the children. Both parties in the case are abundantly able to take care of themselves, no matter how the divorce [illegible] we must hear from witnesses as to Mrs. Taggart's care of the boys."

Mrs. Taggart has been absent from the court room for the last two days, leaving [illegible].

POLICE IN RIOT WITH A GANG OF 500 TOUGHS.

A free fight amounting almost to riot, in which nearly 500 people were involved, [illegible] patrolmen from the East Dedham street station a vigorous battle for half an hour last night on Harrison avenue.

Simon Ganss of No. 16 Seneca street, who was the innocent victim of an assault by a gang of roughs, sustained a badly split mouth, was brutally kicked and beaten and is thought to be suffering from internal injuries. Joseph McTaig, eighteen, of No. 142 East Brookline street, who was caught by Patrolman Flaherty just as he delivered the blow which split Ganss's face, is locked up at the East Dedham street station. The police are looking for others known as the "Newton street gang." They expect to have several of them in court Monday morning.

Ganss, with his wife, was walking up Harrison avenue near Seneca street when he was passed by some members of the Newton street gang. In passing one of them was pushed against Mr. Ganss. He [illegible] and immediately [illegible] was knocked into the gutter and kicked and beaten. His cries, mingled with those of his wife, brought Patrolman Flaherty on the run. Flaherty with drawn club called on the mob to disperse.

Instead of this others rushed to the scene. Soon there were nearly 500. Some assisted the officer, while others joined in with the assailants and it was a free fight until somebody notified another officer and a patrol wagon full of men arrived on the scene. Then a free fight started in which the officers were victors.

Philadelphia, Aug. 26.—Carl Starble, a farmhand, walked into the office of Sheriff Jones at Gloucester, N. J., to-day and said:

"I killed a man. His ghost has haunted me ever since. I want to be hanged and have my misery ended."

Starble then said that he came from Virginia. In a quarrel he had killed a friend named James Jeffries and had fled North.

Sheriff Jones telegraphed to the town in Virginia where the murder was supposed to have been committed. He got back word that the story was true, that a reward had been offered for Starble and to hold him.

FIREMAN SERIOUSLY INJURED AT FIRE IN CHELSEA.

One fireman was seriously hurt, $2,500 damage was done and a large quantity of naphtha was endangered in a fire at the Samuel Cabot lampblack works on Marginal street, Chelsea, early to-day.

The fire started from spontaneous combustion in a one-story storehouse. It spread to two packing houses adjoining, but was brought under control before it burned any of the buildings extensively. On account of the danger of its [illegible] to the naphtha storehouse, two alarms were sounded.

The horses attached to hose 3 were frightened by the bursting of a hose and made a jump forward. Driver William Butler was knocked down and trampled, receiving internal injuries. He is in Frost Hospital.

SEA CAPTAIN IS ROBBED OF $600

Captain W. F. Harding of the five-masted schooner Grace A. Martin drew $600 in bills from the bank yesterday and was robbed of it all a few minutes later while he was walking down North street.

He started out for Mystic wharf, via North street. He remembers especially of seeing that the money was safe while going through Dock square. In front of No. 12 North street he halted to look in a window and a stranger collided with him.

In three or four minutes Captain Harding mechanically put his hand in the money pocket just to make sure of the roll again. The roll was gone.

Boston People Are Among the Dead and Injured In Maine Hotel Catastrophe.

Before he undertook to save his own life, driven to it by the fast racing flames which forced [illegible] a room and thence out of the window to the ground, where he fell, badly burned, he had lifted one woman [illegible] and carried her bodily down the stairs to safety. Then he raced back to the hotel, by this time burning fiercely in every part, and attempted to continue the work of rescue.

Here, along smoke-filled halls and with tongues of fire reaching for him, he fought his way through corridors to arouse four or five of those who had not been awakened by the first alarm. As he ran a solid wall of fire closed in behind him and began to spread [illegible] in front. With head down he went through the flames to reach an isolated bedroom, shouting as he ran.

Roused by His Shouts.

It will probably cost his life, but the occupants of the room were aroused at the last moment by his shouts, and leaped from the window to safety on the sod below. Not knowing they were safe, Boutwell still tried to go forward until the flames closed on two sides of him and he [illegible] through an open door of a [illegible] falling on his back and [illegible].

"Can't you do something for me?" he asked of the first man who came to him, at the same time holding up his burned hands. The man got him water and moved him farther away from the fire. At the first opportunity he was moved to the Sir Charles Hotel, where he was attended by Dr. [illegible]. He [illegible] there in a semi-conscious condition.

Woman's Leg Broken.

Of the other injured Mrs. Hassan, whose husband is manager of the Utopia Chocolate Company of Boston, is the most badly hurt. She received internal injuries and also broke her leg by a jump from the second story window of the hotel to the ground, thirty feet below. The injuries to those remaining, while painful, are not serious.

The three bodies of the dead were recovered to-day after it had been stated that no one had lost his life. [illegible] Mr. and Mrs. Martin and their [illegible] son were found to be missing. This resulted in a search of the ruins, with the result that they were all found near together, overcome by smoke as they had tried to escape, and then burned.

The finding of these three bodies resulted in a further and more complete search, but it is believed now that these three are all who met death. Practically every other person in the hotel, both guests and employes, is accounted for.

Wild Panic Follows Alarm.

Scenes of wild panic followed the alarm of fire and men and women battled side by side to overcome the flames which were rapidly spreading. The effort was vain, however, for in less than half an hour from the alarm the roof fell in. Those who had tried to check the blaze had been compelled to jump from their windows.

Many escaped in scanty attire and lost, in addition, all their personal effects. It is estimated that several thousand dollars' worth of jewelry alone was destroyed, as several women [illegible] and magnificent collections of gems. None stopped to take their belongings, however, the first thought being escape.

The fire came at the end of one of the merriest evenings that the guests of the hotel have enjoyed in many weeks. A whist party held in the parlors was attended by every one of the twenty-three guests. It was after 11 o'clock when the party broke up.

Nearly all of the guests immediately retired. There was [illegible] on the veranda when Robert Boutwell, who was employed as clerk, closed up for the night.

It was about 2:30 o'clock when the fire was discovered. William Smith, one of the porters who sleeps in a room over the kitchen, awoke to find his room full of flames.

Found Pillow Blazing.

"My pillow was on fire," he said. "My hair was singed and all I could see was flames. The smoke stifled me, but I managed to get to the door. Then I raced through the hallways, banging on the doors and shouting to the people to wake up.

"I think everybody was in bed with the exception of Mrs. Hanna and her daughter. Miss Hanna assisted her mother down the stairs and they got out all right. Then the guests on the second floor who could not get down the stairs commenced to jump and to shout for help. It was terrible."

Immediately after the porter awoke young Boutwell was up, and together they raced through the halls awaking the guests. After a time the porter was compelled to desist, but Boutwell kept on, fighting his way through the flames.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin and their young son, Spencer, had a room on the second floor front. They were awakened and sought the hallway. Across the way were three rooms occupied by W. J. Maxwell, his wife and twelve year old son, Frederick.

Mr. Maxwell was awakened first. He was hurriedly pulling on some clothes and had roused his wife and son when there came a banging on the door.

"For God's sake open the door and let us in," a voice said.

Mr. Maxwell opened the door.

"A cloud of the thickest smoke I ever saw rushed into the room," he says. "I was stifled. I could see no one. As I fell back and commenced to stagger I felt my wife push me toward the window. The next thing I knew I was on the ground with a terrible pain in my ankle, but my head clearer.

"I called to my wife to jump. She hung by the window and dropped to the ground. I caught her as she fell. Then we shouted for our boy, who was in the next room. We thought he was lost. A minute later a voice at our elbow shouted, 'Here I am, all right, and we had Fred.'

"Then we saw Boutwell lying near us on the ground, his arms outstretched and breathing with difficulty. He was terribly burned. His face and hands were the most terrible sight I ever saw. He said, 'Can't you do something for me?' I got him some water and raised him up a little. He was in an awful shape.

"Our boy has told us that Spencer Martin came into the room when I opened the door. He was crying for his mother. Fred led the way to the window and told him to jump, but Spencer did not dare to. He went back into the smoke and was suffocated."

As nearly as can be figured, Mr. and Mrs. Martin found that Spencer was missing and went after him. They undoubtedly found the boy and tried to get to a window. All three were caught by the rush of smoke and fell in the corridor. The bodies were found together, having died in each others' arms.

Presence of Mind Shown.

Fred Maxwell displayed wonderful presence of mind for a boy. He shut the door of his room when he found the smoke was pouring in and made his way to another room. There he kicked out the window and the screen and looked out. A doorway barred his exit. Taking a running jump, the boy went through the window, cleared the doorway below, and landed, unhurt, on the soft grass.

Now Boutwell is hovering between life and death at the Sir Charles. "While there's life there's hope," [illegible] the message which came from his room to-night. His father has arrived from Malden and is at his bedside.

Next to the deaths in the fire the injuries to Boutwell caused the most discussion after the excitement was over. He is called nothing but "Bobbie" here. Everybody knows him. He was popular.

"They were talking about 'Bobbie's' heroism last night," said Mr. Nutter. "You know he jumped from the steamer and rescued a girl who had gone under from a rowboat. They all thought it was a great thing and they were going to do something for him."

Young Boutwell was intending to return to Colby University next year. He had already had one year. He was working his way through college and the employment with the hotel gave him a good start for the Fall.

"'Bobbie' Boutwell was the nicest boy we ever had here," said Mr. Nutter. "Everybody liked him. People who lost all their things have come to me to-day to ask how 'Bobbie' is, and have lost all thought of their own troubles. Every person who was a guest at the hotel prays that he may recover."

Talk of Incendiarism.

There is some talk to-night of the fire having been of incendiary origin, but thus far Deputy Sheriff Brown and Coroner Morse, who are here investigating, have failed to find any trace of a "firebug." It is supposed that the fire came from the kitchen, although the fires there had been smouldering for several hours.

At the time the fire broke out the following guests were in the hotel:

Fred A. Grubb of New York, Mrs. John Hanna and Miss Elsie Hanna of Brooklyn; Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Murray of New York; F. E. Shannon of Boston; Mrs. Dr. M[illegible] and daughter of Dorchester; Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Maxwell and Fred Maxwell of Brookline; Mr. and Mrs. George Hassan [illegible]; Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Martin and Spencer Martin of Roslindale; Mr. and Mrs. Rufus J. Henchey of Boston; Charles O. Nelson of Boston; Mrs. A. D. Copeland, her six-year-old son and her mother, Mrs. Lothrop of West Bridgewater, Mass.; William H. Price of Brooklyn, and Mr. and Mrs. George Cabot, the former one of the proprietors of the hotel.

The hotel was a three-story structure, containing eighteen rooms, and was built twenty-seven years ago. It was owned by the Maine Central Railroad, and was leased for the Summer by B. B. Nutter of Brockton, Mass., and George A. Cabot of Wellesley Hills, Mass.

Boutwell's heroic work to-day was the second demonstration of bravery made by him within forty-eight hours. On Thursday night Miss Margaret Herman was in a small boat which was struck and demolished by the steamer Maranacook, throwing Miss Herman into the water. She was unable to swim, and Boutwell, who was a passenger on the steamer, dove from the rail and went to the rescue of the girl.

FORMER WIFE TELLS AMAZING STORY OF BIGAMIST WITZHOFF OF MANY DISGUISES WHO MARRIED, DRUGGED, AND THEN DESERTED HER

WON HER HEART WHILE WED TO ANOTHER.

Handsome, Brilliant, She Never Doubted Him Till Discovery of Letter to Him Under New Name Aroused Suspicion

12 WOMEN FOUND WHO HAVE BEEN DESERTED

Police, Hot in Pursuit, Had Suspect Under Arrest in New York Yesterday, but He Proved to Be Wrong Man

How Dr. George A. Witzhoff, the alleged husband of twenty wives, disguised himself by wearing false teeth of various kinds, using eye glasses and removing his moustache is part of the remarkable story told to the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN by Mrs. Elta Randall-Muller, of Cambridge, one of the victims of the man who is now sought upon two indictments.

In her story Mrs. Randall-Muller also relates how the doctor attempted to drug her. Less than a year after they were wedded, she declares, he began to treat her for a nervous disease, but she grew worse all the time, and when he was away and she refrained from taking the medicine, she grew better. Because of this she is convinced that the man was using drugs on her for an ulterior purpose.

How she accused the man of his perfidy and, she says, he admitted it, she has told graphically here for the first time.

The story is in line with that of Hoch, the much-married man of Chicago. It recites how this handsome and brilliantly educated man married women, robbed them of all they possessed and then deserted them.

A full dozen women so far have been found who declare that they were married to this man. They met and were won by him under different names and nearly all tell the same story of his almost hypnotic power to charm them and then of his treachery.

The various victims of the man in different cities have joined forces to run him down. Mrs. Randall-Muller has heard that he is dead, but this report is not believed to be true.

The first accurate and detailed description of the man that has been made public is given in the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN today. This information will be of interest to the police of the various cities who are seeking the man.

CAMBRIDGE WIFE TELLS OF MARRIAGE

By Mrs. Elta Randall-Muller.

It is not a pleasant thing for me to write this, but owing to the extensive manner in which the case has been published and facts misrepresented, I really feel that I would like to talk in my own justification and as the BOSTON AMERICAN is willing to correct some of these misstatements and make things clearer to the public, I have taken this opportunity to place the facts before my many friends in Boston and vicinity.

I first met Dr. Edmund R. Muller through a dentist in Boston with whom I had been acquainted for some time. After keeping company with him for several months he proposed marriage and a trip to Philadelphia. In the [illegible] we were married [illegible] by Rev. James Francis of [illegible] and resided at No. 2 [illegible] street, Somerville, where I lived [illegible]. Soon after my marriage with Dr. Muller he opened an office in the [illegible] building on Tremont street, where he did mechanical dentistry and was apparently very successful.

Treated Her Kindly.

The doctor treated me very kindly and we were very happy. I had no fault to find at all. He did not ask me for $100 but gave me money and was very anxious for me to take a trip with him to Europe. But my family objecting to me [illegible] home for so long a time I decided not to go.

His frequent trips to be away beginning three months after our marriage were to Hartford, New Haven and Bridgeport, as I learned. In June the doctor told me that he had an offer of an excellent position that he had [illegible] some years previous with an elderly gentleman who was addicted to the use of morphine and was in a very weak condition. [illegible] to Bridgeport [illegible] remain with him in a sanitarium. I objected at first and wanted him to remain in his Boston office. He said that the salary would be very large, his expenses would all be paid, and that it would be very much better to sacrifice our happiness for a time so as to gain in the future. More than that, the man had promised to leave him a handsome legacy. He [illegible] of this plan continually for two months and made several visits to Hartford, where he said Rider was stopping, and told me that he had agreed to care for him as long as he lived. He then closed his Boston office and went to Bridgeport, but came home regularly each week, and I had no reason at that time to doubt his statements. He finally told me that the doctor wished him to go to Chicago on business, as the old gentleman owned several large buildings in that city and desired to turn the real estate into cash. He was gone a week or ten days, and returned as before, and I still had no reason to doubt.

Visits More Frequent.

These visits became more and more frequent. He went to Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, St. Louis and several other large Western cities, each time stating that Dr. Rider was attending to business and selling some of his property at a [illegible] and would invest his money extensively in the East. He sent me large sums of money as it was realized [illegible] to wish me to go to Bridgeport, where he intended to build [illegible] and make our home there for [illegible]. This state of affairs continued and he was away a great deal of the time. We often met in New York, Philadelphia and several other large cities, where we spent many pleasant weeks, after which he would return to Boston with me in each instance and spend a few days with me in our home in Somerville.

My health was not at all good at that time and he still persisted in my taking a trip to [illegible], [illegible] he owned extensive properties and where his grandmother, [illegible] and sister were residing. He said his father had died several years previously and left a large estate divided between the [illegible], three brothers and a sister. It was somewhere in Switzerland he said, but he never told me just where. That was one of the things I did not know.

Was College Graduate.

My husband was a graduate physician from the University of Pennsylvania, had a diploma and said he had practiced medicine and that he had at one time owned a drug store in New York City. The doctor began treating me for a nervous trouble, perhaps seven or eight months after the wedding, but I continued to fail and at that time I noticed that I felt very much better when he was away and I was not taking his medicine than when he was treating me.

I spent some time with him in Springfield in the Winter of 1903, and while there he received a letter addressed to George A. Westhoff, Massasoit House, and he claimed the letter as his property, so I became suspicious. After that I watched him somewhat more carefully and having found out that there was no sanitarium of the kind he described in Bridgeport, I went to the place where I had been sending his mail and found that he was living under the name of George A. Westhoff and was married in September, 1903, to a Brooklyn girl, Mrs. Anna M. Parkhill.

I went to their home and interviewed him, but could not find Mrs. Westhoff until later, when I met her in New York by appointment.

I communicated with Mrs. Westhoff for some months previous to this meeting, as he immediately left for parts unknown after being discovered. I heard nothing further except that he was in trouble in [illegible]. In a letter sent from there he said he was arrested, which was false. Thereafter I heard nothing from him.

Meanwhile Mrs. Anna M. Westhoff wished me to go to New York, meet her at her attorney's office and make arrangements to have him indicted for bigamy. I did so, and in May of 1904, I went before the Grand Jury in New York city, told my story and he was indicted. After the indictment we followed all possible clues and assisted in every way toward finding and arresting him.

Helping in the Search.

Since his indictment I have been doing my share in the search for him.

About six months ago I received a letter from a stranger in New York stating that the doctor had died in a New York hospital of appendicitis. This I believed because he had been suffering with a pain in his side and apparently threatened with appendicitis for some time.

I have corresponded with Mrs. Westhoff continually through this affair and I find her to be a woman of character and one who trusted Dr. Muller, or Westhoff, as she knew him, much more than I had, because it was through me that these facts were revealed to her.

I met her at her attorney's office in May last year. Her mother, Mrs. Otto, was with her. We went to their home and I dined with them and enjoyed my visit as far as possible under the circumstances. I read a great many letters that he had written to her in the same strain that he had written to me, and I learned a great deal that will help prosecute this man should he be found.

Description of Doctor.

Dr. Muller is thirty nine years of age, is five feet and eight inches tall, and weighs 225 to 230 pounds. He is of very dark complexion with a heavy growth of black hair which he parts in the middle. In the centre of his forehead is a vertical scar. He wears eye glasses or rimless spectacles. He may have a dark moustache or he may be with smooth face, and he dresses very nicely. I recall that he most always wore a Prince Albert coat and a derby or silk hat. There is a scar low on his left shoulder blade where he was stabbed in two places. The double wounds are about an inch and a half in length each. He said he received them when in college.

The doctor's features are regular, except as to his forehead, which is very low. He always parted his hair in the middle, [illegible] low upon his forehead and the scar [illegible] showed in the parting. His forehead is his [illegible] feature. His [illegible] attractive.

His teeth [illegible] he has made a change since I knew him. The doctor's upper teeth were all extracted to make way for false teeth, except one eye tooth, which was left natural and which assisted in holding the plate. He has more than one plate.

Sometimes he wears one showing a gold tooth. At other times they all show to be plain. I found that he sometimes changed his appearance upon going away. He could change his spectacles, his teeth, and he could shave his moustache and look like a different man.

In three weeks his moustache would have attained a good growth again. But he never altered the parting of his hair and he could not get rid of his tremendous shock of coal black hair, and did not seem to want to. He was very proud of his hair. My husband was neatness personified and was a handsome man.

Wore Fine Clothes.

"I remember that he always wore a collar with turned down corners and his favorite neckties were white ones, always tied four-in-hand. The finest textures were none too good for him in whatever garment. Usually he wore a common sense vici kid shoe with no cap on the toe. The smallness of his hands and feet were noticeable in so large a man. Always erect, with head and shoulders back and a graceful gait he was conspicuous anywhere.

I know very little of his early life. He always told me of his life abroad and I believe that he had crossed the water some six or seven times. If he reads this report I think he will go again and that very quickly.

When I got suspicious and went to Bridgeport I found him at his house living under the name of George Westhoff. He met me at the door and he seemed very much alarmed. [illegible] my first words were that I knew [illegible]. He begged me very hard to say nothing until he could get a chance to straighten matters out satisfactory to me.

We went into the parlor and were alone when we talked. I accused him, and he did not deny, that he had married Anna. Undertaking to explain matters satisfactorily he put forth that this was all done for a financial purpose, that he had done it all for me. He couldn't get money enough to satisfy him by ordinary means, and when I should hear him in detail I would see matters in a different light.

Threatened Arrest.

I threatened him with arrest and told him I should at once put the case into the hands of the police authorities. I walked out then and took the midnight train for Boston and he came as far as New Haven with me, pleading and explaining all the way. I understand that he went back, packed up and left Bridgeport on a very late train. As far as I know he did not return.

I [illegible] in New York, returned [illegible] resumed my business [illegible] and have been very successful and thankful that I found him out [illegible] with him any longer.

My folks were very kind and helpful throughout all this, and I in turn refrained from giving the painful facts to my friends [illegible] for their sakes as well as my own.

My husband was always in constant communication with one Dr. Paul Adler of St. Louis while living with me.

I understand and believe that Mr. Muller has married an incredible number of women, and I sincerely hope that he may be brought to justice and so receive the punishment that he so richly deserves.

FOUR WOMEN HURT IN AUTOMOBILE CRASH.

In a rear-end collision between an automobile and a carriage in Melrose yesterday afternoon Mrs. Mary Palmer of Roxbury had her right wrist broken, her right hip gashed and received internal injuries. Mrs. Trenholm of Chatham street, Melrose, [illegible] three fingers on her right hand broken, and her sister, Mrs. William T. Almon, of the same address, was severely bruised. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore J. Potter of West Roxbury, who were in the auto with Mrs. Palmer, alone escaped injury.

The accident was caused by the auto gliding around the corner of Wyoming avenue and Chatham street, Melrose, and crashing into the back of the carriage containing Mrs. Almon and Mrs. Trenholm.

[illegible] touring car was driven by Mr. Potter. He had his wife on the front seat with him, with Mrs. Palmer on the rear seat. The auto rounded the corner and crashed into the carriage [illegible] from Mr. Potter's sight by [illegible].

The rear wheels of the carriage were broken and the [illegible] was pushed forward so violently that Mrs. Almon and Mrs. Trenholm [illegible] were thrown out, one on each side. The horse Mrs. Almon was driving was an unusually steady animal and stopped short when the crash came instead of bolting, as most horses would have done. Mr. Potter had just time to shut off the power of the auto before it struck the carriage. This brought the auto to a stop just after it hit the carriage.

The front wheels of the auto were sprung and the big road lamp was smashed.

After the accident Mrs. Almon and Mrs. Trenholm were taken to their home a short distance away from Chatham street, and Mrs. Potter and Mrs. Palmer were driven home to Roxbury in a carriage.

SUFFERED YEARS WITH COMPLICATED PELVIC DISEASES

Hopeless Invalid Women Restored to Health and Usefulness By Pe-ru-na

General Debility, Nervousness, Backache, Kidney Troubles, Female Weakness, Are All Symptoms of Pelvic Catarrh.

Pe-ru-na Is An Unfailing Remedy For All of These Cases.

If the reader will take the pains to glance [illegible] statements concerning Peruna.

They were chronic and hopeless victims of pelvic catarrh.

Now, they are healthy, happy and useful women.

The symptoms of catarrhal weakness [illegible] catarrh and female catarrh are very numerous.

The symptoms most frequently met are general debility, kidney trouble—loss of flesh, bad complexion, tired and worn out all the time [illegible] and pains, unable to stand long at a time or to walk any distance, periodical cramps, displacement of pelvic organs, ovarian troubles, throbbing, trembling, flashes of heat, nervous headaches — chronic dyspepsia — constipation — insomnia — irritability — easily frightened—brown spots before the eyes—dizziness, roaring in the head, etc.

Any one or more of these symptoms mean that the victim has chronic systemic catarrh which is undermining all the bodily functions and weakening every nerve center.

Such women are liable to become bedfast, or, are induced to submit to some surgical operation in complete desperation.

Operations Unnecessary.

A short course of Peruna is sufficient to convince any woman [illegible] that there is a remedy that is able to come to her relief.

Thousands of women have already discovered this, but there are tens of thousands of others who need to know it.

Any woman who reads these lines and feels that her case is described in whole or in part by the above symptoms should lose no time in giving Peruna a fair trial.

Those requiring special advice should write to Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus Ohio, when they will receive a prompt reply to their letters free of charge.

Eight Years of Pain—Praises Pe-ru-na for Her Recovery.

Mrs. L. Mahaffey, 195 Seventh street, Portland Ore., Chairman St. Patrick's Circle, writes:

"I suffered for eight years with prolapsus uteri and a painful inflamed condition, which at times compelled me to go to bed, as I was unable to stand on my feet.

"I tried different remedies which brought only temporary relief until a friend told me how she had been cured of ovarian trouble by the use of Peruna and advised me to try it. I used it for two months with surprising results."

Sick Thirteen Years—Well Woman To-day—Thanks to Pe-ru-na.

Miss Louise Carr, 1030 S. New Jersey street, Indianapolis, Ind., writes:

"I have had my share of sickness. For thirteen years I have not known what it was to draw a well breath, and it is thanks to Peruna that I am well today. I suffered with general weakness, female complaint and severe kidney trouble. Peruna cured me."

Suffered Three Years—Recommends Pe-ru-na.

Mrs. A. L. Orrison, 1005 E. Franklin street, Richmond, Va., writes:

"After three months' trial of your remedy, I am cured of painful menstruation.

"After suffering untold agony for three years, and spending over a hundred dollars and finding no relief, whatever, I began taking Peruna under the advice which you so kindly gave me.

"I shall never cease to be thankful for this, or recommend Peruna to all women whom I find suffering from the above ailment."

It is said that the true genius, contemplating a new creation, does not know fatigue. Days, weeks and months, or even a lifetime spent in study and consideration of an idea [illegible] take on [illegible] to the [illegible] are more than [illegible] of the painter or [illegible] his task and realizes that he has achieved the effect for which he strived.

The same feeling animates the breast of the skilled workman, the business or the professional man, whose heart is in his [illegible] end of [illegible] being.

Growing Desire for Beauty.

The channels in which individual thought [illegible] and happiness of others [illegible] are [illegible] This [illegible] has [illegible] of [illegible] les, as witness the vast sums [illegible] annually for window dressing alone. Men selected especially for their artistic taste and eye for the beautiful are paid large salaries by every great department store to superintend this work, and thousands of dollars are expended annually for materials and fixtures [illegible]ed to appropriately display in the large show windows the things on sale within the establishment.

But from attractive window displays this desire for [illegible] has grown step by [illegible] these great emporiums the patron may pass from one end to the other, from top [illegible] conformation without encountering a single instance to offend the [illegible] of the [illegible] artistic person.

Reconstruction Work Done.

These have been the [illegible] uppermost in the minds of Mr. R. H. White and his associates in the well-known R. H. White Company, when considering the plans for the reconstruction of the interior of their mammoth store on Washington street.

These plans have been carried out. The work of reconstruction is completed. To-morrow the formal opening of what is really a new R. H. White Company's establishment will take place, and their patrons will have an [illegible] upon the [illegible] transformation [illegible] that has been wrought within the past four months.

Few persons realize the immense amount of thought, labor and money involved in the reconstruction of a store of this size. It is not a matter of moments, but of months and years of study and consideration.

Before the plans were even decided upon a member of the firm and an architect visited the principal cities of Europe and the United States, gathering ideas and [illegible] suggestions for them. Then [illegible] set of plans was prepared [illegible] gone over carefully and every [illegible] Revised plans were pre[illegible]g some original ideas and [illegible] in the cities visited.

More Than $100,000 Expended.

Contracts were let, and an army of skilled workmen last April began the transformation that has cost over $100,000.

[illegible] of highly polished mahogany and the soft snow whiteness of [illegible] are the [illegible]. They are [illegible] interior an air of simplicity that is at once an evidence of good taste, and the keynote of elegance.

The fixtures are of solid mahogany. They alone cost a fortune. The carving is light, but exceedingly artistic, the rounded corners of the various counters adding greatly to the effect. Over one thousand feet of new show cases have been added. At regular intervals are the rows of white columns, extending the full length of the establishment. The solid mahogany shelves in the centre of each enclosure are below the height of an ordinary sized person, so [illegible] at one end the visitor is able to look to the farthermost corner of the main floor.

[illegible] too much to say that nowhere in Boston, or in fact in any other city [illegible] there an interior scene more beautiful than that beheld by the visitor as he enters the main entrance. Extending before him is the forest of white columns, surmounted by the carved capitals [illegible] expanse of ceiling [illegible] above a veritable sea of mahogany woodwork.

Largest Mirrors Ever Made.

The effect is enhanced by the succession of immense mirrors covering the left wall from one end to the other. The mirrors, the full height of the wall, are arranged so that the immense store, with its succession of columns, extends apparently as far as the eye can reach. Two of the [illegible] at the magnified expanse of the interior.

The floor plan has been completely changed. The various counters have been placed at right angles to their former position, so that instead of having to walk 100 feet to find an opening into another department, only a distance of about twelve to fourteen feet must be traversed.

Through the [illegible] main entrance [illegible] to the main aisle, [illegible] feet long and as wide as a street. Unobstructed by anything it will be a favorite promenade for the thousands of persons who enter the great store. The broad aisle on the left [illegible] occupied by [illegible] which will be [illegible] the usual [illegible] lots offered from time to time.

A Marvel of Growth.

The completion of the work of reconstruction marks another epoch in the remarkable history and growth of the R. H. White Company from the "little green trunk" of the [illegible] founder, Mr. R. H. White, to the modern twentieth century department store of the R. H. White Company, still dominated by his personality and the principles of fair dealing and a dollar's worth for a dollar upon which he founded and built up this flourishing business.

Mr. White is now past the three score, and well started on the remaining ten of man's allotted years. He is as attentive to the details of his business [illegible] fifty years ago when, a boy in the village of Hinsdale in the Berkshires, with that "little green trunk," which he still treasures as a memento, stocked with his small supply of goods, he began his business career. The transition from that stage to the present is marked by a continuous display of energy, industry, honesty and enterprise [illegible] what a Yankee boy [illegible] animated by the proper spirit. Who can say that the climax is reached even to-day in the present company that occupies one of the largest business blocks in the United States [illegible] a stable of two hundred horses for delivery service in addition to an excellent automobile system, employs regularly more than 2,500 men, women, boys and girls, and has fifty buyers travelling all over the world, collecting the merchandise of every conceivable description, for sale over the firm's counters.

Capital Then But $1,000.

Mr. White was [illegible] in 1862 when the [illegible] Hanover street [illegible] was [illegible] the present [illegible] made his debut [illegible] merchants of Boston to the ranks of whose [illegible] White Company was incorporated with a capital of $1,000,000; this merely by way of comparison.

In 1876 the concern removed to a new building which it had constructed [illegible] on Washington street [illegible] Time has proven the [illegible] White's judgment, and [illegible] have been the pioneer in the ext[illegible] the business district below this point.

Demand for More Room.

Business increased so that seven years after in 1883 it was found necessary to erect an [illegible] into Harrison avenue extension which had just been opened. Again in 1888, an imperative [illegible] compelled the e[illegible] the north side of the [illegible] ford street. It was [illegible] it the cry [illegible] repeated again as the business expanded, and the remainder of what is now known as the "Annex" on the corner of Bedford and Washington streets, was opened in 1895.

When, in 1899, another addition was [illegible] the south side [illegible] street the R. H. White Company [illegible] of Bedford and Washington streets. This is a ground area of 35,000 square feet.

And now that the usual five-year period has elapsed, and the extension of the building is cut off by thoroughfares on all sides, the reconstruction of the interior has [illegible] in [illegible] with the R. H. White policy of "keeping up with the procession."

"System" the Watchword.

Columns could be written about the wonderful system on which the business of an immense establishment like the R. H. White Company is conducted. From the time the goods are received from all [illegible] until a purchase is handed to a [illegible] or delivered at the purchaser's home, system is the watchword.

Any new device guaranteed to save time or labor or contribute to the comfort or convenience of patrons has been quickly [illegible] to these ends as installed in the establishment.

They include the quickest and safest elevators, an escalador or moving stairway that carries 7,000 persons up and down in an hour, and the pneumatic carrier system that insures the least waiting by one who has [illegible]

Then there is the dining room on the third floor, attractively designed and in [illegible] ments and [illegible] dinner may be [illegible].

Emergency Hospital.

Leading from the first floor by a single flight of stairs is the ladies' waiting [illegible]. The room is of Moorish design, and handsomely fitted up at a cost of $50,000. [illegible] may be had a view of the [illegible]

Opposite the waiting room is an emergency hospital, fitted up with the best equipment obtainable for the relief of the injured. At the foot of the stairs is a substation of the [illegible] post office, where all the business incidental to the mails may be transacted. The magnitude of the patronage [illegible]

The mail [illegible] department on the fourth floor has been thoroughly reorganized so that the same accuracy and dispatch is now guaranteed for the out of town shopper that is guaranteed to the individual shopper.

These and many other conveniences for the shopper are provided, all of which leads back to the original proposition, that in the realization of his ideal the genius finds [illegible]

When You have a Bad Breath

THAT'S the time to take a Cascaret.

When your tongue is coated,
—When you have Heartburn, Belching, Acid Risings in throat,
—When Pimples begin to peep out,
—When your Stomach Gnaws or Burns,
—That's the time to check coming Constipation, Indigestion and Dyspepsia.

But,—they act like Exercise on the Muscles that shrink and expand the Intestines, thus pushing the Food on Naturally to its Finish.

That's Constipation!

Castor Oil, or "Physic" will help to slide out one load of trouble, but they can't help the Cause.

• • •

In fact, they weaken the Bowel-Muscles more than ever by slackening them, and by doing work for them which they should do for themselves.

When your Arm-Muscles grow flabby they need Exercise, to strengthen them—not a sling to support them.

When your Bowel-Muscles grow flabby they need Exercise to strengthen them—not "Physic" to pamper them.

Then carry the little ten-cent "Vest Pocket" box constantly with you, and take a Cascaret whenever you suspect you need it.

One Cascaret at a time will promptly cleanse a foul Breath, or Coated Tongue, thus proving clearly its ready, steady, sure, but mild and effective action.

• • •

A thousand dollars a year spent in amusements could not buy for you half as much hearty Happiness, solid Comfort, Cheerful Temper and Health Insurance as that little ten-cent "Vest Pocket" Box of Cascarets will bring you.

All Druggists sell them—over ten million boxes a year, for six years past.

Be very careful to get the genuine, made only by the Sterling Remedy Company and never sold in bulk. Every tablet stamped "CCC."

A sample and the famous booklet, "Cures of Constipation," Free for the asking. Address Sterling Remedy Company, Chicago or New York.

Levi Hackett was in doubt. He knew the [illegible] was full. He didn't know the stranger [illegible] history. It was [illegible]

She reached her father's side. "What is it?" she asked.

"Mattie has been killed," said the father.

With the speed of youth Nettie ran ahead [illegible] down beside the girl, who was beyond speaking.

MARKET BULLS STILL ON THE RAMPAGE.

Record-Breaking Strength of Stocks Is Increasing, but Note of Warning Should Sound Against Confidence

FARMERS WEALTHIER THAN EVER BEFORE

Unprecedented Crops Are One Cause for Continued High Prices, Which Will Probably Soar for Some Weeks

Reaction from stimulation has not yet set in, and, to carry out the Wall Street figure of speech, the stock market is much more than convalescent.

After preceding weeks of advancing prices, the past week brought only fresh strength and activity in the market. The strength of the business and financial situation has continued unchanged, and with each of the reactions which the week developed spasmodically there came an increased buying power which forced prices upward with renewed vigor and buoyancy.

In the opinion of many brokers who give impartial advice to their clients, the present bull movement will continue well into the Fall. Traders are too eager to stop now, and are only following the lead of big financial men who seem to have agreed that these shall be the halcyon days of the stock market. As before indicated, the general financial outlook could hardly be more promising and the whole country can see nothing but Wall Street. The glance merely means a reflection of the unprecedented prosperity.

It is supposed that some banking houses have liquidated large lines of stock of late but other and more powerful interests have absorbed their holdings. All offerings in the market have been absorbed without any material break in prices. When selling is the order of the day, recessions occur, but as soon as it is over a new buying power lifts the market to a higher level.

In the West all is even better than ever. The farmers have begun to harvest the largest crops in the history of the country and the new grain is already moving on the railroads. Farmers are wealthier than ever before. It is predicted that the traffic and other business on the railroads will break all records. The great activity in the business world is reflected in the reports of record breaking earnings.

Wall Street doesn't really care whether Japan and Russia tear each other indefinitely. The peace talk is made only an excuse for more high prices. Such are the conditions which are causing one of the most pronounced bull movements the stock market has ever felt.

According to private advices, made to larger interests by railroad officials, the past week has made the corn crop, and a yield of nearly three billions of bushels is considered a certainty. This is one of the biggest of bull arguments. It assures a big tonnage next year, both eastbound and westbound, on granger lines and splendid earnings for the Burlington, Missouri Pacific, Atchison, Union Pacific and Rock Island systems.

This brilliant outlook, however, does not alter the temporary views of the critics who have of late taken the position that owing to depleted bank reserves the money question will later on exert a restraining and perhaps moderately depressing influence upon speculation. That is for the future. At present such possibilities are ignored.

Cash Holdings Decrease.

The bank statement yesterday had little effect, as might have been expected. Traders refuse to see anything that might look like lower prices. Contrary to expectations, loans and deposits both decreased, in the aggregate nearly $9,000,000. Cash holdings, however, decreased over $2,000,000, and this caused a slight decrease in the surplus, the amount of the decrease being $377,500. The surplus now stands at only $8,978,175, as compared with $57,275,400 a year ago at this time. The differences would be startling were the bank statement as important a factor as it used to be and were it as truthful an indicator of monetary conditions. The phenomenal growth of the trust companies has brought about a situation which would [illegible] a proper report of their conditions a better barometer of the financial weather.

There has been practically no news to account for the steady growth of strength in the stock market. Commission business is increasing to a marked extent, as the public approaches a little more closely to trading. The taking of profits is heavy but is accompanied by no more speculative pyramiding than might be expected in such a market as this. At all foreign centres sentiment is more optimistic, based on the belief that the negotiations at Portsmouth will finally result in peace.

The sensational advance in Reading has, of course, been the feature of the week. The rise in this and other anthracite coal [illegible] has been no surprise, however, to well informed people who have been watching [illegible] conditions of the roads. Phenomenal [illegible] are back of these advances and [illegible] opinion is that although temporary [illegible] are certain the vast profits [illegible] the Lackawanna, the Delaware & Hudson, Lehigh Valley and other hard coal roads will result in even higher prices than have yet been reached. It is even said that the problem of the managers of these bonanzas is how to conceal their enormous earnings.

Reading Centre of Speculation.

As to Reading, at times during the week practically all the speculative interest was centred in that stock. The crowd dealing in it was by far the largest that has been gathered by any one stock in a long time, and the transactions were accompanied by intense excitement.

There is [illegible] reason to suspect that the anxiety among certain houses which have followed the movement [illegible] without directing it, to [illegible] arises from the [illegible] part of the [illegible] has been taking profits. It is understood that one man alone purchased 80,000 shares of Reading when the stock was selling at [illegible] not intend to [illegible] the price of this issue yesterday [illegible] 122 and [illegible] at 121. This [illegible] net loss of 1⅝ points [illegible] view of the fact that the stock has [illegible] seventy points in a very [illegible] of yesterday is insignificant.

Amalgamated gained ¼ to 87⅝. [illegible] transactions amounted to 22,800 shares, as compared with 21,100 in Reading. The leader of the market in point of activity was Union Pacific again. There was heavy selling of the stock, but the price held firm and lost only ⅛ under the pressure, closing at 136⅝. The transactions in this stock amounted to 43,000 shares.

Steel common was a close second in activity, with 87,000 shares. The price advanced ⅝ to 37⅝. The preferred gained ⅝ to 105⅝.

Wisconsin Central was not so much of a feature as it was earlier in the week, only 1,000 shares changing hands. The price took another jump, advancing 1⅞ to 3[illegible]. Reports of a deal in the road were still current, but were more or less indefinite.

Tennessee Coal and Iron gained 1½ to 91⅝. Rock Island preferred advanced 1⅛ to 80⅝, but all the other changes among the advances, which prevailed through most of the list, were fractional. Only a few stocks declined, the greatest loss being that mentioned in Reading common.

In Boston the market was of a characteristic Saturday dulness. The attendance of members on the floor of the exchange was unusually small. The closing prices were irregular, but with no important changes either way. There was no pronounced movement to sell. Prices weakened more from the lack of buying orders than from selling pressure. Calumet & Hecla stood alone as a strong card, advancing 5 points to 670 on small transactions.

In the general list Massachusetts Gas was a feature, advancing after the opening to 50⅝, up ⅝, and closing at 50⅝, up ⅞. Amalgamated held firm throughout the session, closing at 87⅝, ⅝ above the opening.

Financial Notes.

The Bangor & Aroostook unconditionally guarantees $3,000,000 thirty-year 5 per cent. bonds of the Northern Maine Seaport Railroad.

The Albany & Susquehanna has been granted consent by the Railroad Commissioners of New York to issue a new first mortgage for $10,000,000, to replace maturing 6 and 7 per cent. bonds.

The Nahant & Lynn Street Railroad Company has petitioned the Railroad Commissioners to issue $50,000 additional capital stock to pay for construction. The company's former petition to issue $35,000 new stock has been withdrawn.

The nominating committee of the Boston Stock Exchange has presented the following list of officers for the ensuing year: For president, John Parkinson; vice president, Henry W. Dodd. These are submitted to succeed Charles C. Jackson and Major Henry L. Higginson respectively. Of the governing committee whose terms expire this year Hazen Clement, Charles B. Tewksbury and Manning Emery have been nominated.

HIGHER MONEY WOULD HELP STOCKS.

That [illegible] Wall street which lives only in the past and which [illegible] nothing ever happening except as it happened before is [illegible] of unnecessary worry about the money rates.

Money is really too cheap for a healthy bull market. If the rate could [illegible] per cent and held there the bank statement would improve [illegible] week to week and the sentiment [illegible] of it would keep the stock [illegible]. With money at 2 per cent, [illegible] the trust companies carry [illegible] deposits [illegible] draws 2 per cent.

Much of this deposit is in the shape of bank notes, with which the country is flooded now. Legal tenders have to be held as reserve. With money at three per cent the trust companies would draw out this $[illegible] in order to get the higher rate of interest. This would decrease loans in the banks and deposits as well, to that extent, and shoot their [illegible] reserve up [illegible]. The weakling cry about low bank reserves would cease.

If money hardens this autumn it will be because the country's prosperity is superlative. The greater the demand for money the more sensible becomes the bull campaign, for the money will be needed to move the tremendous crops, and as soon as the crops are moved the ocean of cash will come rushing back into every eddy of commerce.

The only immediate danger lies in the direction of Portsmouth. The big operators are not considering war or peace as part of the campaign, but they realize that the general public has a sentimental notion that stocks will break a few points if the war is to be resumed, and it is the business of stock market operators to give the public what it wants.

The local tractions and the steel shares are to be cards for the coming week.

ALLEGED SLAYER OF CHILD TO KNOW FATE MONDAY.

Victory, Vt., Aug. 26.—Robert Waterman, charged with causing the death of his little daughter, Lilia, by giving her an overdose of checkerberry, will know his fate on Monday afternoon when Justice McGinnis will render his decision.

Arguments were made to-day at the village of Galops. Attorney Howe, for the defence, argued that no malice, no premeditation and no intention to murder had been shown by the Government. He moved that the defendant be discharged and it is the justice's decision upon this motion that will be given Monday.

Though mention was made during the arguments of the assertion of E. E. Richardson, a witness, that on August 5 Waterman had offered him $5 to get out of town until after the hearing, the court made no comment on this point.

The sympathy of the townspeople here is with Waterman, and the belief is that he will be freed.

PRIEST LURED INTO WOMAN'S ROOM AND ROBBED.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 26.—Upon the statement made to the police by the Rev. Benedict Roslnski, a Catholic priest of St. Stanislaus Church, that he had been held a prisoner for twenty-four hours without food, and forced to sign two notes for $500 each, and two checks for a like amount, which had been since cashed, besides being robbed of $80 and some jewelry, two men and a woman were arrested to-day.

The woman is said to have lured the priest to her room in Cedars avenue by pretending to be ill and in need of spiritual consolation, and the men are said to have rushed in upon him and held the Rev. Roslnski prisoner until he had satisfied their demands.

NEW LYNN THEATRE.

Lynn, Aug. 26.—The new Auditorium Theatre on Andrew street, this city, will be opened Monday night. The theatre will be devoted to vaudeville.

SUBURBAN SALES FEATURE IN REALTY.

Country Places Change Hands, While City Parcels Grow Less in Demand; Buyers May Return with Coming Month

FAVORABLE OUTLOOK FOR OUT-OF-TOWN DEALS

Sales of suburban property have been the feature of the week in the real estate market. City parcels have been in less demand than usual, but out of town business has been thriving. The approach of September is bringing buyers back into the market, but the transfers of city parcels have not increased. Country places have changed ownership in goodly number, and brokers report that they have orders which will assure an active trade in that kind of real estate well into the Fall.

The property in Duxbury, known as the Jerome Chandler estate, situated on the corner of Tremont and Elm streets, has been sold through the office of Edward T. Harrington & Co. The property consists of a dwelling house and about three acres of land overlooking Duxbury Bay and the famous Miles Standish monument. The purchaser, a Boston man whose name is withheld for the present, buys for occupancy and will soon add much of the adjoining property to his purchase. The terms of the sale were private and Hattie W. Cushing was the grantor.

East Boston Sale.

Thomas C. McEnany has sold the brick dwelling and about 1,627 square feet of land at No. 103 Saratoga street, East Boston, to Mary E. Mahoney. The owner was Elizabeth Wright. The estate includes a house of ten rooms with all improvements and is assessed for $2,900. The purchaser bought for investment on private terms.

MacCorry & Burns have sold for William H. Jones his house and estate No. 20 Henry street, Everett, taxed for $3,400. The lot comprises 7,500 square feet of land, a large dwelling house and an automobile stable. The purchase price was in excess of the assessed valuation. The purchaser's name will be published when the deed is delivered. Sarah H. Holbrook has conveyed to Henry L. Page through the same office her estate on Howard street, Randolph, with 2,000 square feet of land, a two story frame house and a stable. Mr. Page buys for a home and will make extensive improvements. The consideration was private.

Sells for Bank.

M. F. Southwick has purchased, through the office of Edward T. Harrington & Co., the property numbered 42 Fourth street, Wellington, consisting of a house of thirteen rooms with all modern improvements, a stable and 22,000 square feet land. The assessed value is about $6,000. R. Gibson was the grantor. The same firm has sold Walnut Hill, Natick, for the Worcester Five Cent Savings Bank ten more lots of land located on Beacon street and Hillside avenue, adjoining the "Harwood" estate. The total area of the land was 60,000 square feet. There are but a few lots on this valuable tract, opened by this firm two years ago. The desirability and accessibility were made very apparent by the numerous sales which the firm made on this plot.

Everett Land Sale.

Edward T. Harrington & Co. report the sale of a parcel of land on the easterly side of Glendale Terrace, Everett, consisting of 3,000 square feet, to C. C. Fredrickson who owns the adjoining property and buys for the purpose of enlarging his already extensive place.

Rhoda M. Brown has sold the property located at 64 Prescott street, Everett, to Martin O'Toole, who buys for a home. The assessed value is $1700. W. A. Dunham was the broker.

Agreements have been signed in the office of [illegible] for the sale of the estate No. 158 Thorndike street, Brookline, comprising a modern dwelling and 6,002 square feet of land, all assessed on $9,400, of which $2,400 is on the land. The assessment is considered to be much below the value of the estate. The grantors are John L. Nichols, et al., executors of the estate of John C. Nichols, late of Brookline. The name of the purchaser will be given when the final papers pass. Through the same office Walter Kimball has sold the frame dwelling and [illegible] square feet of land, No. 61 Texteth street, assessed on $7,900, of which $2,900 is on the land. The purchaser has bought for occupancy.

Land at Forest Hills.

Thomas G. Washburn has sold through the office of Arthur W. Evans the desirable lot of land at Forest Hills, having a frontage of 170 feet on Washington street and situated near the Boston Elevated Railway Company car house and the Parkway. There is 30,173 square feet of land and the assessed value is $11,800. The name of the purchaser will be announced later.

Recent transfers in Dorchester include title to a parcel of residence property numbered 340 Seaver street, corner of Normandy street, which has been conveyed by F. W. Clarke to Josephine Newmarch. There are 4,852 square feet of land in the estate and a frame house, all taxed on $7,000. Of this amount $2,700 is on the land.

Frederick Kem has conveyed to S. A. Muirenin title to No. 55 West Dedham street, South End, near Newland street, consisting of 1,250 square feet of land and a frame house.

Also in the South End Hyman Pence has transferred to Ida Kamil title to the estate numbered 41 Oswego street, near Albany street, comprising a brick building and 900 square feet of land, all taxed on $5,600.

WILL FIGHT DOCK TRUST GRAB IN COURT.

Petitions Have Been Filed with the Railroad Commissioners for Hearing When Matter Comes Up for Action

CITIZENS MAY ASK FOR AN INJUNCTION

The National Dock Trust grab of certain streets of East Boston for the purpose of laying railroad tracks and operating a freight line along and across those streets, although approved by the Board of Aldermen, is not yet a fixed fact, and there is little prospect that the promoters will profit by the enterprise for months to come.

The citizens of East Boston, a majority of whom are opposed to the free use of their streets by the corporation, and many of whom appeared before the Mayor to protest against the franchise granted by the board, have taken steps to test the matter in the courts and will also appear before the Board of Railroad Commissioners, should the question of laying out the road ever reach that body, to protest against the grant to the trust.

John J. Douglass, representing important interests in East Boston, has already filed with the Board of Railroad Commissioners a petition asking that he be allowed to apepar and present the views of his clients at any hearing that may be held, with the further request that such hearing be a public one. The East Boston Citizens' Trade Association, the representative organization in that section of the city, has also filed a request to be heard before the railroad commissioners.

Petition for Hearing.

BOSTON, Aug. 24, 1905.

To the Honorable Board of Railroad Commissioners of Massachusetts:

Gentlemen—Understanding that a petition from the National Dock Trust, asking the approval of your honorable board of certain railroad locations at grade on [illegible] street, East Boston, said locations having been recently granted to said trust by the Boston Board of Aldermen, and soon to be presented to you, I desire as attorney for several interests in East Boston to be heard on this question, and would respectfully ask that the said hearing be public.

Very respectfully,

JOHN J. DOUGLASS,

No. 252 Webster street, East Boston.

There is little probability that the railroad commissioners will be called to act upon this question in the immediate future, as before the dock trust can be heard by the railroad commissioners upon a request to confirm the location of the tracks it must present to the board, under the statutes of Massachusetts, a copy of the record showing the permission of the city authorities to the laying out of the road. While this permission has been granted by the Board of Aldermen of Boston, the serious question raised as to the legality of the passage of the franchise over the veto of the Mayor has caused City Clerk Edward J. Donovan to inquire into the legal status of the case, and in the absence of a vote of instruction by the Board of Aldermen he would decline to grant such a certificate if it were asked by the Trust officials.

May Ask Injunction.

The Board of Aldermen will next meet September 6, and until that time no certificate or certified copy of the record can be obtained by the trust from the city clerk. If at that time the city clerk is instructed to grant a certificate or certified copy of the records, he will no doubt comply with the order unless he is enjoined by the courts from so doing.

Representatives of the citizens' trade associations declare that such an injunction will be forthcoming if necessary to prevent the consummation of the grab.

Alderman Frank J. Linehan, whose sensational charges caused a recent inquiry by the Grand Jury, declares that he also will play a prominent part in the next meeting of the Board of Aldermen, at which time he proposes to offer an order for the public investigation of the doings of the trust officials in connection with the granting of the franchise by the Aldermen.

Alderman Linehan, although making no boast of his future intentions to throw light upon the dock trust operations, declares he is in no way discouraged in his attempt to bring to justice those whom he alleges are guilty of a crime against the people of the East Boston section of the city and those who are violators of the laws of the Commonwealth.

Linehan to Give Story.

Since the inquiry of the grand jury, with its verdict of "no crime," the Alderman has been active in his researches and at the proper time he declares the world shall have the full story in all its details and then he will ask of the people of the city their opinion of the transactions and whether or not a crime was attempted and carried out.

To a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter Alderman Linehan said:

"I do not desire to make a statement for publication at this time, but you may rest assured that all the facts in my possession will yet be made public. The public, the court of last resort, shall hear and decide upon the justice of my contentions.

"So far from abandoning my purpose to show up the transactions of the Dock Trust I am still more than ever determined to bring the whole matter to the attention of the people of Boston. Every day I am learning more of the doings connected with the passage of the permit to lay tracks, and the proper time the public shall know the truth."

"Will you offer the order for a public investigation, as you have announced was your purpose, at the next meeting of the Board?" asked the reporter.

"Certainly I shall, and if the other members of the board desire to refuse to make the facts, as I know them, public property, then the responsibility will rest on their heads and not on mine.

"I shall make an earnest effort to have an investigation and believe I can convince any unbiased person that such an investigation should be had.

"What new light if any have you got in the matter?" asked the reporter.

"That I cannot state at this time, but I am learning more and more every day and at the proper time both the press and public shall have the whole story. Don't ask or expect me to talk just now. I am doing all I can to bring to justice certain people and I am in no way discouraged at the outlook. Public opinion will settle the question if the courts do not."

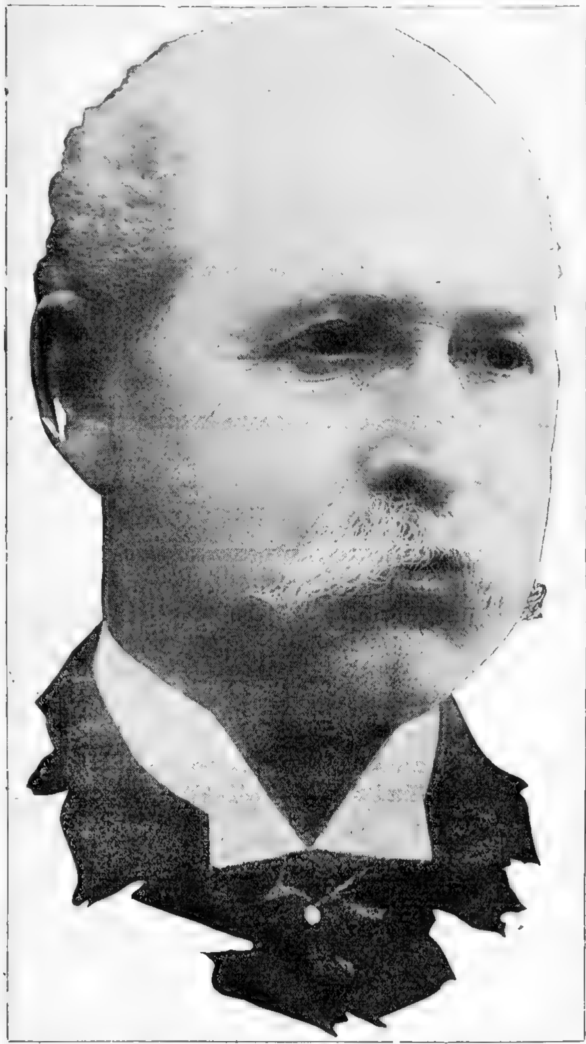
GOV. DOUGLAS'S FIRST STATEMENT OF CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH HE WILL ACCEPT A RENOMINATION



GOVERNOR DOUGLAS AS HE LOOKS TODAY.

> I have said NO twice. I meant it both times. If it comes to pass that I should ever say YES, it will be because of an overwhelming sentiment; because the people rise in their might and demand another year of service from me. As yet I have not changed my mind; personally I do not want to be Governor again; Mrs. Douglas and my family much prefer that I should not be; but, if the sentiment that I should run again keeps on growing and I can bring myself to think it would not be dishonorable to change my mind--that people would not consider me a weathercock---why, I can't tell what might happen.
> —Gov. Douglas to the Boston American Correspondent.

He Has NOT Changed His Mind, and Declares That He Will Not Run Again Unless He Is Forced to Do So by an Overwhelming Popular Demand.

By his formal refusal on two occasions to accept a renomination for Governor, and by the storm of protests which these refusals have aroused throughout the State, Governor Douglas has become the foremost figure in the Democratic party in Massachusetts.

But one question is asked wherever politics is discussed, and that question is:

"Will Douglas run again?"

Up to the present Governor Douglas has made but one answer—a sincere and emphatic NO.

The following interview, therefore, is the most important contribution to State political history that has been made since the opening of the present campaign.

In it the Governor outlines for the first time in detail his reasons for declining a renomination, and also, for the first time, HE MAKES KNOWN CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH HE MIGHT BE PERSUADED TO RECONSIDER and to make another fight for the Governorship.

BY CHARLES O. POWER.

Copyright, 1905, by American-Journal-Examiner.

It was not quite nine o'clock yesterday morning when I pressed the button at the door of Governor Douglas's Summer home at Monument Beach. The maid, in answer to my inquiry, said the Governor was about the place somewhere, and invited me to sit by the fireplace and enjoy the warmth of the log fire while waiting. She looked through the house, but could not find him.

I had better luck. Glancing through a front window, to get a view of the harbor, dotted with small sailing craft, I saw the shadow of the familiar figure turn the corner of the house on the broad veranda. It was the Governor.

MOVING PICTURE OF A BROWN STUDY.

He was in his characteristic strolling pose. Both hands were behind his back, the head was slightly bowed, and the step was slow and measured. I could not help thinking that, just at that time, Governor Douglas was a moving picture of a brown study.

The Governor's greeting was cordial and he pushed his chair directly in front of the one allotted to me. And, by the fireside, we talked.

"Well, Mr. Power, what brings you down to Monument Beach so early this morning?"

"I came down to see you, Governor, to have a talk with you about the political situation."

The Governor smiled his blandest. It was a moment before he spoke.

"Well, I wish I could tell you something, but, really, I have nothing to say."

Of course, I had heard that before, but, as I could not leave Monument Beach until 10.51, and did not know another soul there, I decided to ask a few more questions and make a few suggestions to avoid being lonesome. And so I had the temerity to say:

"You must understand, Governor, that there is a powerful sentiment for you. You must know at this time that the Democratic party is practically unanimous for you, and that a large element of the Republican party wants you to run again. You must know all that, Governor."

PUBLIC SENTIMENT AFFECTS HIM.

"Yes, yes, I do know that (and the Governor was talking seriously now), from the newspapers, from very many letters and by word of mouth from a great many callers. But I have not changed my mind. However, to say that the pressure of the sentiment has not affected me would not be telling the exact truth.

"But I have said 'No' twice. My people think it would be dishonorable for me to say 'Yes' in view of that fact. I feel sometimes that, if I ever should change my mind, some people, some Republican speakers perhaps, would say I had been a party to a 'put up job,' arranged for the purpose of arousing sentiment in my favor. But (and the Governor spoke most emphatically now) such a statement would be entirely false."

"You need have no scruples on either of those points, Governor," I ventured to suggest, "because it will be well understood that, if you should agree to run again, it will be in response to strong popular demand. And, as for the 'put-up-job' proposition, no one but a cheap politician would raise that cry, and, you know, he could find believers only of his own ilk, which is not the class of people that is anxious to re-elect you Governor of Massachusetts."

"You think that it is so, do you—that the people would know I honestly meant what I said?"

"Why, of course I mean it, Governor."

"I am glad to hear you say that. I have always endeavored to be honorable, and it would hurt me to have the suspicion of scheming in this affair directed at me. My family thinks it would be very wrong for me to change my answer from 'No' to 'Yes,' and, even if I should be carried away by the force of circumstances, it would still be a hard task to convince them it was all right. And, you know, more than all else, I want the respect and good opinion of my family."

"I have said 'No' twice," continued the Governor. "I meant it both times. If it comes to pass that I should ever say 'Yes,' it will be because of an overwhelming sentiment; because the people rise in their might and demand another year of service from me.

"CAN'T TELL WHAT MIGHT HAPPEN."

"As yet I have not changed my mind; personally, I do not want to be Governor again; Mrs. Douglas and my family much prefer that I should not be; but, if the sentiment that I should run again keeps on growing, and I can bring myself to think it would not be dishonorable to change my mind—that people would not consider me a weathercock—why, I cannot tell what might happen."

"But there is no doubt of the demand for you, Governor. From every section of the State comes the appeal. Can you reconcile personal feeling with public duty?" I asked the Governor.

"That is the thing that disturbs me," remarked the Governor earnestly; "I do not want to appear in that light either. You may say this for me, if you will: I don't want to be Governor another year. I appreciate the honor dearly. The work has tied me up more than I care to be. I want more freedom of action.

"As I have told you, I am still standing on my declination to be a candidate, but I am not so stubborn as to say no possible contingency could change my mind. Now, then, if I ever should change my mind it would be because I was convinced that public duty demanded it and felt that my motives were clearly understood."

For a time the talk was desultory. I spoke of ex-Congressman John R. Thayer as a possible running mate and suggested that the Worcester statesman would be more than a match for Curtis Guild on the stump; that he could relieve the Governor of considerable of the speech-making burden; and that, being from the same section that Eben S. Draper, probable nominee of the Republicans, hails from—a section in which Thayer has proved his popularity by defeating three strong Republicans for Congress—he could make a great fight for Lieutenant-Governor. Governor Douglas agreed with me entirely. There was a merry twinkle in the Douglas eye as he said to me:

BELIEVES HE COULD BE RE-ELECTED.

"You think I could be elected again, do you?"

"Why, there's no doubt about it in my mind, Governor. There isn't in yours either, is there?"

"Seriously, I think I could be elected, but don't draw the conclusion from that that I am going to run again. From the assurances of support I have received, from men of all parties, I am inclined to believe my defeat would not be a foregone conclusion if I should run again for Governor. Now, I am sorry I can't say something more definite to you, but I must go on an automobile ride with my daughter shortly. I am going now to the station for the morning papers. Won't you come with me?"

We walked along in silence for a few minutes, the Governor being the first to speak, saying:

"Isn't this a grand morning?"

"And we have such nice roads around here," he continued. "To-day we are going to take a trip to my old home near Plymouth. I like to visit the old place once in a while."

I switched the Governor back to political talk, with the remark that a Democratic Governor of Massachusetts had to be extremely careful about the appointments he made to office, inasmuch as a Republican Council had to pass upon them.

HOW TO WIN PEOPLE'S CONFIDENCE.

"That is just it. A Democratic Governor of this State has to be extremely careful," said the Governor. "A Democratic Governor could not turn Republicans out of office if he would, neither could he fill all the offices held by Republicans whose tenure expired during his term, if he was so disposed. Nor would it be a wise policy to pursue if he could.

"I believe the best way to build up a minority party, whose candidates may be elected to such an important office as the Governorship, is to win the confidence of the people by fair dealing. The Democrats of Massachusetts, to be successful, must attract to them thousands of Republican votes. When in power they must show that office-holders who have given good, honest, able service to the State are not to be the prey of partisanship.

"The successful party has a right to place its own men in office in such instances as it appears public interests will be benefited, or at least not injured. I have tried to appoint all the Democrats I could, having in mind always the public interests and the Executive Council. In some quarters my appointments have been criticised by Democrats, but I have made my own selections on judgments reached after hearing parties in support of various candidates. Some of the men suggested for appointment that I have not appointed have been excellent men, but it must be borne in mind that I could not appoint them all. I have appointed many Democrats to important offices and no question but that of fitness has been considered. And, in following that policy, I think I have been liberal with all elements of the party."

GEORGE FRED WILLIAMS' CASE

I suggested that recent expressions of sentiment relative to his administration would seem to indicate that the great bulk of the people had no fault to find with him on the score of appointments. And then I mentioned the so-called Democratic machine, and remarked that I did not believe the talk of cutting him by the Boston Democracy in the event of his running again was well founded.

"I have been reminded that George Fred Williams was cut in Boston," suggested Governor Douglas.

"But that was different," I explained. "Mr. Williams was never Governor. You are Governor. There is a widespread demand for another year of service from you. The Boston machine is wise. And you know a Boston mayoralty contest is coming on shortly after the State election. The machine wants a big party vote at both elections, no falling off in the State vote that might be charged up to machine influence, thus creating a division of the party and reacting to the detriment of the city ticket."

"Yes, I can see that the situation in Boston is different than it was when Mr. Williams was running. Now you are going to write something, I suppose. Tell me, what are you going to say?"

"I am going to say, Governor, something like this:

"That you have not yet changed your mind.

WILL NOT CHANGE MIND UNLESS—

"That when you said 'No' you meant it.

"That it is possible that pressure might come upon you, such circumstances might arise, that, in spite of your personal disinclination to again run for Governor, you might be obliged to yield to the call of public duty.

"That there are some questions that interest you deeply and [illegible]"

Right here Governor Douglas interrupted. We were standing in the middle of the road, fair target for the eyes of many Summer inhabitants of Monument Beach who were sitting on the verandas of the Stearns clubhouse. I had never seen the Governor gesticulate before, but he emphasized this little speech with many gestures:

"You might also say that my mind is not to be changed unless I am firmly convinced the people of this State believe my election would be a benefit to the State and my withdrawal a detriment, and unless I am sure a change of mind would be honestly understood.

"I know it would be a hard campaign, and I do not want to go through the ordeal."

"I know the Republicans would spend lots of money and make every endeavor

MALDEN POLICE IN FIGHT WITH MOB.

Third Riot of Week Against Officers When They Went to Arrest Disturber, and They Had to Force Way Out

Surrounded by a yelling stone-throwing, riotous mob of young men, Patrolmen Shaughnessey, Brewster and Wilson of the Malden police force had a hard time last night arresting Jeremiah Creedon, charged with assaulting John Reed, both of Malden. This was the third riotous demonstration in Malden last week against the police force, which has become prominent on account of charges against its lax administration of the law.

Reed went to the courthouse and said Creedon had assaulted him. He displayed a battered face in support of his complaint. Patrolman Shaughnessey started to arrest Creedon last night and Creedon, so the police say, put up a fight. Shaughnessey drew his club and then a crowd gathered threatening the patrolman. Brewster and Wilson came to Shaughnessey's aid and the crowd [illegible] Rocks were thrown at the patrolmen and both Wilson and Shaughnessey were hit about the head with these missiles.

SUBURBS GAIN AT BOSTON'S EXPENSE.

Increased Population of the Hub Big Disappointment to Those Who Have Long Predicted an Enormous Advance

FIGURES AFTER LABOR DAY WILL TELL STORY

BOSTON'S POPULATION FOR LAST 25 YEARS.

[illegible]	U. S. census	362,839
1885	State census	390,393
1890	U. S. census	448,477
1895	State census	496,920
1900	U. S. census	560,892

Increase from 1895 to 1900, 63,972, or about 13 per cent.

Increase from 1900 to 1905, (?)

"Boston must not expect an enormous increase in population when the census returns are made."

In these words Charles Felton Pidgin chief statistician of the State Bureau of Labor and Statistics, intimated that the census reports which he will make public after Labor Day will not indicate the tremendous increase in Boston's population that residents have fondly expected.

Instead of the 100,000 increase for the last five years that has been anticipated there will be a very small increase, comparatively.

And these reasons are given:

First, Boston's "bedroom" population, as that of the suburbs is called, has increased beyond all expecations.

Second, more than two-thirds of the day population of Boston leaves the city at the close of business, and therefore cannot be included as a part of the city's population.

Third, the downtown residential section is so crowded now that it would be next to impossible to increase its population greatly without causing interference from the Board of Health.

Fourth, the increasing demand of people who work in the city for quarters less limited than these that can be secured in the city proper.

These are the main reasons for the expected small increase in the Hub's population. There are other reasons which will be dwelt upon when the bureau's reports are made.

May Gain 75,000.

By making comparisons, a prominent statistician has figured that Boston's population will show an increase of between 50,000 and 75,000, when Mr. Pidgin makes his figures public. The State will show a large increase, notably in the increase of immigrant population.

For years the population of Boston has steadily increased, until there is little room now in the city proper for more residents. People who come to the city for work live in the suburbs. Although they virtually live in Boston, they cannot be considered part of its population, because they have their abode in "bedrooms" of the Hub.

The work of compiling the figures of the enumerators will be completed in a week. Even now there are twelve census takers at work among the Back Bay residences, trying to get data regarding the residents of that locality, many of whom had closed their homes and gone to Summer resorts when the census was begun.

And in the North and West Ends the work has been delayed by the trouble experienced in getting data from the immigrant population. All kinds of obstacles have been met and overcome, still it is felt that there may be many names missed from the lists.

Getting at Data.

Mr. Pidgin and his forces are trying hard to get this lost data. As much as can possibly be gathered will be put into these reports, and in less than two weeks more the department will let Boston know just how many people live in the city, how many come into it for business during the day.

"Boston people must not expect a tremendous increase in its population," said Mr. Pidgin to a BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN reporter, in talking of the prospective result of the enumerators in Boston.

"The 'bedroom' population of Boston, by which I mean that of such cities and towns as Newton, Cambridge, Somerville, Malden, Melrose, Quincy, Milton and other suburbs has increased to such an extent that the only possible conclusion is a small increase for the city proper.

"Look at the street cars during the evening. Everyone is going out of town. Go to the stations and see the trains. All loaded with people leaving the city. And look at these same cars and trains in the morning hours. Everyone is coming in.

"Therefore, while the day population of Boston is enormous, the real population, that is, the number of persons who have their abode here, will not show a tremendous increase.

Gains in Suburbs.

"I will not make any predictions as to what the population will be. I cannot guess at it, because the figures are yet in such shape that a guess might be near or far from the truth. One can make his own conclusions from the figures of the suburban population, which is always an excellent indicator of what the population of the city itself will be."

The increase in some of the cities with so-called bedroom population since the last State census is:

Cambridge	15,760
Somerville	10,085
Everett	10,530
Quincy	7,350
Newton	9,100
Woburn	[illegible]
Chelsea	6,010
Waltham	5,360
Medford	6,160
Malden	[illegible]
Melrose	[illegible]

Combined, these cities have an increase of about 125,000 in population, while there are many places not in this list that will swell the increase to over 200,000. More than two-thirds of the increased population is made up of persons who work in Boston during the day.

POSTMAN GOES TO OREGON A GROOM

Providence, R. I., Aug. 26.—Edward F. McCaffery, a letter carrier, was married this afternoon to Miss May C. McGuirk, sister of Drs. William and Edward F. McGuirk, in St. Mary's parochial residence. The couple left this evening for Portland, Ore., where Mr. McCaffery will attend the national convention of letter carriers as a delegate from the Rhode Island association.

May McDonough Has Been Swimming Only Two Seasons, but Easily Surpasses Many of More Experience

"Yes, I'm May McDonough, but I don't know about being any mermaid. I'll tell you what I'll do, though. I'll swim any girl around here a friendly race for a prize."

Miss Mary McDonough, or "May," as she is generally known by her friends, of No. 5 Joy street, South Boston, perched comfortably on the edge of the float at L street bath and laughed merrily. She splashed at the water with bare brown arms, apparently for the mere pleasure of splashing. And she's the champion girl swimmer of L street bath, if she is only sixteen years old and has had less than two swimming seasons.

So says Superintendent William C. Rowe, of the bath, who is confident she can beat any girl swimmer at L street or anywhere else about Boston. She is entered to swim at the public bathing exhibition at the bath beach Tuesday, and, though she gives handicaps to the other girls, Superintendent Rowe expects her to win.

Called the Mermaid.

Someone was telling that there was a mermaid down at L street bath and that her name was May McDonough and that she could swim like a fish. So a reporter for the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN went down to the bath yesterday and sought the mermaid.

Superintendent Rowe went out on the float and sung out, "May! May!"

"Here," came from the water, where several girls were splashing about. Then a swimmer came alongside the float, propelled by easy, overhand strokes. There was a pretty face, tanned brown as a berry, a slender throat and two exceedingly round and capable looking arms. The swimmer clambered out on to the float, very boy-girlish looking. She wore a masculine jersey and trunks reaching to the knee.

Wears Brother's Costume.

She stood up on the float. She was tall, straight and slender, but with a splendid chest for a girl of her evident youth.

"Yes, I'm May McDonough," she answered, then added her laughing remark about being no mermaid, but being willing to swim against any other girl.

Then she sat down and began to splash in the water for the fun of it.

"This is my brother's swimming costume," she said simply. "I used to wear blouse and skirt, of course. But they're hard to swim in. I borrowed my brother's and now use his costume. It's easier."

"Yes, a lot, I guess."

"Yes, a lot, I guess, too," said Superintendent Rowe. "May, I guess you've been in the water six hours some days. But it doesn't seem to hurt you a bit."

"How long have you been swimming, Miss McDonough?"

Best Pupil at the Bath.

"This is my second year," said the mermaid, with pride. "I came here the latter part of last Summer and got Mr. Rowe to teach me to swim, just the breast stroke. Now I know lots of strokes Mr. Rowe has taught me. I usually swim with the English overhand. It's best for speed and isn't tiring. I can do the double overhand, the Australian crawl and the Indian strokes, too, see—"

The lithe figure slid into the water and there was a lively exhibition of different swimming strokes. Then the mermaid came up on the float again.

"May is the most remarkable pupil I ever had," said Superintendent Rowe. "I was surprised at her progress from the first? It cost her no effort to master the various strokes and at the end of her first season she ranked with the best swimmers I have. Now she can beat any of them."

"Find it pretty healthy, do you?"

"It's a great sport," said the girl. "It's exercise, too. See those arms"—she stretched out the two brown, muscular arms—"well, they used to be soft and delicate. Now they beat my brother's."

WEDDING RING IS CAUSE OF HIS ARREST.

Jeweler Held Up Porters, Who, He Asserts, Tried to Walk Out of Store Without Paying for Ring He Had On

The attempt of Charles Long of Elmhurst, Ill., a colored porter on the Santa Fe limited, to buy a wedding ring in a Tremont street jewelry store last night, in company with Fred B. Alexander, a fellow porter, ended in the two colored men getting held up at the point of a revolver by the jeweler, who charged them with trying to get the ring without paying full value for it. The men were arrested and then released and now Long threatens to have the jeweler arrested for larceny of $5 and attempted assault with a loaded weapon.

Alberts turned to his safe to get some other rings and found Long had the ring on his finger. Alberts says that Long declared the ring worth about $5 and offered a $3 bill. Alberts refused, then Long and Alexander started out, as though they had paid for the ring. Alberts pulled a revolver on them. They stopped and, while a startled crowd collected at the door, a policeman came through and took all three to Lagrange Street Station.

HEARTY WELCOME IS READY FOR REDMOND

To welcome the Hon. William Redmond, M. P., Boston's leading Irish associations are preparing a great out-door reception at the Huntington Avenue Baseball Grounds on Thursday, September 14, and there is a greater interest aroused in the reception and greeting because Mr. Redmond has undergone a six months' sentence of imprisonment since he was last in Boston. The Clareman's Association is taking a leading part in the arrangements, for this is Mr. Redmond's thirteenth year as a member of Parliament from East Clare.

An athletic programme is being arranged for the day upon which Mr. Redmond will be honored. There will be a 100-yard, 440-yard, half mile, one-mile and three mile races, high and broad jumps and other events, as well as speechmaking.

POLICE SAVE MAN FROM DROWNING

To the efficient work of Patrolman Mullen and Reserve Officer Moran of the Hanover street station, in treating a man whom they had rescued from drowning, the doctors at the Relief Hospital attribute the saving of the man's life. He is unconscious at the hospital, the doctors are doing everything possible to revive him and it is expected that he will recover.

It has been impossible to learn the man's name. He is about thirty-five years old, five feet eight inches tall, weighs about 160 pounds, is of dark complexion, and wore dark clothes. There was nothing in his pockets which would serve to prove his identity.

2 NEW YORK CROOKS SENT OUT OF BOSTON

The Stein brothers, Joseph and Sam, aged respectively fourteen and twenty-four, were "railroaded" out of Boston yesterday afternoon by the police, who say they are clever New York crooks. Joseph, the younger brother was arrested by Patrolman Hart on Winter street, after the officer had watched the boy carefully open a woman's chatelaine purse. The woman declined to prosecute.

HOLDUP ON STREET; MAN ROBBED OF $25

Edward Hackett, forty-five years old, of Nos. 1 and 3 Lowell street, was arrested shortly after 10 o'clock last night, charged with holding up and robbing Alfred E. Daley, a stranger in Boston, of $25. Patrolman McDonald of the Hanover street station found the two men fighting in a doorway on Haverhill street and brought them to the station house. Daley told the police that Hackett had held him up on the street, thrust him into the doorway and robbed him of all his money.

"The money is wrapped up in my handkerchief," said Daley. The money and the handkerchief, the police say, were found upon Hackett. He will be in the Municipal Court on Monday.

BUSINESS OF LAND OFFICE INCREASES

Washington, Aug. 26.—A compilation of the business done by the General Land Office during the fiscal year ending June 30 last shows that 91,084 patents were issued. This is an increase of 34,098 over the issue of the previous year. At the beginning of the present fiscal year there were 53,558 cases pending, a decrease of 36,042.

COLLINS TO TAKE 3 WEEKS VACATION

Mayor Collins will take his fall vacation of three weeks immediately following Labor Day. He will leave Thursday, September 7, for the Virginia Hot Springs.

To a reporter of the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN the Mayor said. "On the Thursday after Labor Day I shall go down to the Virginia Hot Springs for about three weeks. I was there last year in the latter part of August and the first weeks of September and found it an excellent place to rest at that season of the year."

The Mayor would make no statement regarding his willingness to again become a candidate for election and the leaders of the organization who favor his renomination say that he will not break his silence until after his return from the South.

$25,000 FIRE AT NEW LONDON

"Florodora" Girl Not on Good Terms With Aged Parent, Who Stood by Her During Her Trial in New York

DID NOT VISIT HOME WHEN IN WASHINGTON

Washington, Aug. 26. A great deal of sentimental interest has been revived here in Nan Patterson, because of the reported breach between the former "Florodora" girl and her aged father. It is now said they hold no communication, although no explanation is given of the alleged estrangement.

From the day Nan Patterson's arrest for the shooting of "Caesar" Young to that on which she was released, the gray-haired father remained in New York to comfort and assist her. He was in court daily with her. His devotion awakened much sympathy for himself and the imperilled daughter.

When Nan returned here after the Ralph Ash escapade, she went to the residence of her sister. She did not go to the home of her parents at any time during her visit here, although the family live but a block away from the sister. Mr. Patterson passed the sister's residence several times every day. Nan was almost invariably playing croquet in the yard, but they did not speak to each other. Mr. Patterson acted as if unaware that either of his daughters lived in the house he passed.

This apparent estrangement has created more comment here than any other incident connected with the arrest, imprisonment, trial or release of Nan Patterson.

ST. PETER'S PARISH AT BIG LAWN PARTY

The most successful lawn party ever held under the auspices of St. Peter's Catholic Church, Dorchester, took place yesterday on the spacious grounds surrounding the parochial residence on Meeting House Hill. The prettily decorated tables, the dresses of the fair attendants and the hundreds of different colored lanterns and electric lights formed a pretty picture.

The afternoon was given over to the children and more than a thousand took advantage of the fine weather and attended, while in the evening the large grounds were crowded with the older folks.

The proceeds are to be devoted to a fund for the building of a new convent.

LIKE A CITY IN A CITY IS THE HENRY SIEGEL CO.'S GREAT BOSTON STORE, NEARLY COMPLETED

Some corners of the great Henry Siegel Company store on Washington street, the opening date of which is to be announced within a few days.

Opening of Magnificent Emporium of Historic Significance to the City—Will Employ Thousands of New England Workers, and Accommodate Myriads of Shoppers.

On the great fertile plains of the West, towns—aye, cities have risen, like Jonah's gourd, in the night. They are the marvels of American civilization. Pages of description and photographs have been printed to tell this wonderful story.

But more wonderful than this is the birth of a city within a city. It does not attract the same attention because in a way it is hidden from the world. But the fact is the same if only a person would stop to think of it.

The establishment of this store in this historic city at this time is as important, in the opinion of the writer, as the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers.

Boston will point with pride and a feeling of delight to such a structure as the new store of the Henry Siegel Company, they will not forget Faneuil Hall, the Old South Church, King's Chapel, Lexington and Concord.

Has Historic Significance.

It would be sad, indeed, if there were no vision except a backward one. But right here in the city where they threw the tea overboard you can look forward—you can see everything in the way of improvement that the brain of man has yet devised. You can see a Twentieth Century city within a city.

This has reference to the Henry Siegel Company store, and the reader should forget the business of it and regard the opening of this enterprise as historic and progressive. It means more than the ordinary mind can conceive to Boston—the establishment of this store. In time to come there will be no more historic place in the Hub of the New World than the magnificent stone and brick structure that rises in the centre of the business section of the city.

It will benefit probably the whole of New England. Who does not hope for prosperity for the new enterprise?

From three thousand to five thousand people will be employed in this store.

Now think again of the city within a city. There are many New England cities in which fewer people are employed.

Right here it might be well to put in a little point that is unprecedented in the way of business. It is not generally known and when it becomes public it will call forth all kinds of comment—and it only has to do with a few inches of ground.

The Siegel store is built back from the street three feet further than the law specifies—that is, three feet that the company owns is given to the city and the public. Three feet out in the country does not mean much, but right in the heart of the business section of the city it means a great deal, financially and otherwise.

The value of that strip of land that the Henry Siegel Company virtually presents [illegible] according to the estimate of a conservative real estate man, $160,000.

The giving up of that slender strip of valuable land to the public means a world of comfort. It means the difference between a narrow, hot, stuffy, congested street and a wider one in which the people may have some chance to pass.

Well, maybe they haven't asked to get it back. But the fact that this much space was voluntarily given to the public for the convenience of the public speaks worlds for the idea of the promoter of an enterprise like the Henry Siegel Company store.

But there are other features, and this is only meant to give an idea of the situation. Take the fire provision. There is in the building a more perfect fire department than you will find in the average city of 5,000 people. In every department are the firemen. Should a fire occur on any floor word would be sent immediately to the superintendent in his office. He would summon the department of employes and everything possible would be done to extinguish the flames.

But there would be no flurry, no stampede about it. The word "Fire!" would not be mentioned by any person connected with the store. They have a code word for that in order to prevent any of those in the store from getting a fright. Nobody in the store would know anything about a fire unless he saw it. That is simply one of the features.

One of the first things that the visitor notices is the elevator system. There are four elevators on the Hayward place side of the store and four on the Essex street side. These are for passengers and each may carry twenty-five people. On the Harrison avenue side of the store are the freight elevators. That is, the elevators that are used for the carrying of freight. They carry, or may carry, passengers just the same, for there is no difference in the equipment.

Wonderful Moving Stairways.

Then come the escalators as a means of going up and down in the building. These moving stairways are marvels. They run up in the centre of the building to the fifth floor. They are the most elaborate of anything of the kind that has been built in this city. No matter whether the patron is familiar with the device or not, they may use the escalator without discomfort. It is easy to get on and just as easy to get off.

There are many stairways, of course. There are those who do not like the elevator or the escalator. They would rather walk from floor to floor. Especial attention has been accorded to them. The stairways are large, roomy and light. There is no chance to stumble.

Fifteen miles of tubing are used in the cash system of the store. This remarkable provision insures to the benefit of the customer, because it prevents any long waits for change. All of the money dashes through these tubes to the basement, where it falls in a great heap upon tables.

On Washington street the Henry Siegel Company store has a frontage of 200 feet. [illegible] at Harrison avenue and Hayward place the building covers an entire block. On Essex street there is a depth of 240 feet. On Hayward place the store extends 230 feet, while there is a breadth of 230 feet on Harrison avenue. Each floor has about 50,000 square feet, making for the entire store 450,000 square feet.

Near the South Station.

The store is only about five minutes' walk from the South Terminal Station and it is easy of access from every other direction, all of the surface cars of the city and country running right by the doors.

On entering the street floor a panoramic view is presented to the visitor such as seldom is seen. Glass is everywhere. The length of the street show is more than three hundred feet. More glass is used than can be found in ordinary towns or cities of New England.

The ceiling is high, and an atmospheric condition, regulated by warm or cold air, makes the ordinary shopping headache almost impossible. This roominess with its abundance of light and its freshness of air, is the first thing that will strike the visitor as a welcome to the new store.

On the Essex street side of the first floor may be found leather goods and other things of that character. There may be found gloves, women's shoes, toilet articles, optical goods, jewelry, silverware, umbrellas, knit underwear, hosiery, men's furnishings and also a cigar store.

The attractive feature of this floor will probably be found to be the soda fountain. It is one of the finest fountains in the world. The fountain is of onyx, and the counter in front of it is of the same material. [illegible] one of the most magnetic sections of the entire store—the cooling, attractive fountain.

On this floor there is for the accommodation of the patrons telephone booths, a telegraph office and a United States substation postoffice. There are numerous writing desks for any one who may want to write a note and booths where parcels may be wrapped or checked.

Silks and velvets are found on the Hayward place side of the building on the first floor. Women will delight in this section of the store. There may be found dress goods of all kinds, ribbons, linens, white goods, linings, laces, embroidery, veilings, neckwear and all such things.

A mezzanine floor in the rear of the main floor is devoted to the millinery workrooms and the office of the superintendent. Here are the banking rooms of the company. Four per cent is paid on deposits and drafts on foreign countries receive prompt attention.

From the balcony of this floor may be obtained a fine view of the busy hive of industry. The visitor will without doubt be interested in studying the features of the store system from this coign of vantage.

Three Ways to Climb.

There are three ways of getting from the first to the second floor—the elevators, escalator and stairways. All are comfortable and safe. This floor will be of especial interest to women. There may be found the handsomest ready to wear frocks that the world can produce, and a profusion of millinery that will delight the heart of the most fastidious. On this floor are corsets, lingerie, negligee wear, infants' clothing and trimmed and untrimmed hats.

The greater part of this very important [illegible] fashions [illegible] Mantles [illegible] exclusive patterns that will produce a feminine furore are on this floor.

More than ordinary attention is given to furs and this department of the Henry Siegel Company's store is second to none [illegible] the furs are kept is perfectly appointed.

That the management has the welfare of the patron at heart is evidenced particularly on this floor. Here is a large and splendidly furnished parlor, so located that one is away from the noise of the street and the bustle of business. A tired woman may sit down in an easy chair in this room, rest in quiet, read a paper or magazine or write a letter just as though she were in her own home.

Adjoining this parlor is a room in which children may be taken care of by trained nurses. There is also a skilful practising physician, to whom any patron may apply for help. This medical aid is also available at all times for the great army of employes.

Men will be more interested, however, in the third floor. Here are displayed men's and boys' clothing ready to [illegible] In this line of clothing will be shown the perfection of the tailor's art. Style, cut, material, everything [illegible] a good suit of clothing has been utilized in the making of this department. Headwear and footwear for men and boys are also found on this floor.

Near by the display of clothing are the sporting goods which will also attract [illegible] patrons. Here may be found guns, bicycles, automobile sundries and everything that is used in the world of sports.

On the fourth floor is the furniture department, which in itself is a large store. Here may be found pictures and sewing machines. This department is regarded as one of the most important features of the Siegel Company's store, as it is one of the most interesting and attractive. Everything that money and taste can devise has been done to make this one of the most complete furniture departments in the whole country. The cabinet makers' skill has been taxed to the limit to furnish the articles on this floor.

On the Essex street side of the fourth floor are the executive offices of the company. There also is the mail order department [illegible] important [illegible] business. The [illegible] well as the general and private offices, are on this floor.

Possibly the most expensive fixtures [illegible] building are on the fifth floor. Here is found the grocery and provision departments. Here may be found a real churn and fresh butter is made [illegible]

It is hardly probable that the Henry Siegel Company will be able to make all the butter that their patrons desire, nor do they contemplate doing so. Other arrangements will be made to supply their want.

Besides all the staple kind of goods [illegible] there will be kept in this department wines and liquors of all kinds, teas, coffees, canned goods and everything of a delicatessen [illegible] is the cold storage arrangement by which all of the goods are kept in strictly fresh [illegible]

Restaurant on Fifth Floor.

On the fifth floor, occupying the greater portion of it, is a restaurant. This will be one of the most magnificent dining rooms in the city of Boston. The furnishing of this part of the store has been looked after in the most artistic manner. The room itself is highly studded. The ceiling, which is beautifully frescoed, is supported by Corinthian columns of onyx finish.

One part of the restaurant is arranged for the exclusive use of men. Smoking is permitted here. To add to the pleasure of the diner a splendid orchestra will render a programme of an appropriate character. In the centre of the restaurant, [illegible] panels painted by some of the world's most famous artists. By Boston American Leased Wire.

Chicago, Aug. 26.—Boston lost two games to the White Sox here to-day, and the local fans are now wild with delight as they think their team has an excellent chance of winning the pennant.

Boston has hitherto been looked upon as Chicago's most formidable opponent, and now that the Champs have lost four straight games, local fans think the march to the flag will be a triumphant one.

Because of Boston's downfall in this city, it looks as though any chances they might have had to win the pennant are lost.

Chicago Players Happy.

A short time ago, when the Bostons were beaten in two straight double-headers by the Clevelands, the Chicago team gasped with astonishment. They intimated that if they could turn such a trick on the Champs, or any other team, the race would be theirs. When they pulled off this trick to-day their spirits bubbled with enthusiasm.

When it was announced that Cy Young and Tannehill would pitch to-day it looked as though the best the Chicagos could do was to break even.

Doc White pitched the first game and Boston only made four hits off his delivery. Two of their hits came at the opening of the game when they scored a run, their only tally of the game.

Six Hits off Young.

Chicago got six hits off Young. They bunched a couple of singles in the sixth, and aided and abetted by Ferris's error scored twice—enough to win the game.

The feature of the game was the batting of Lee Tannehill and Isbell for the home team and the fielding of the Bostons.

Tannehill, who hasn't lost a game in a long time, and who leads the American League pitchers, went into the second game, and he was touched up for ten hits. Boston made six off Walsh.

Rather loose fielding by the Champs lost them this contest. The batting of Green, Callahan, Freeman and Stahl was the feature.

Champs Hit Lightly.

In the opening contest the White Sox registered six hits to four of the Champs, and this was responsible for their victory. Boston made its biggest threat at scoring a bunch of runs in the first game, when they tallied once.

In the first spasm the Champs certainly looked good, and after Selbach and Parent had singled it looked as though the Champs would knock "Doc" White's [illegible] off, but he steadied down, and during the rest of the game allowed one hit.

"Uncle Cy" pitched effectively except in the sixth inning, when the Sox scored two runs—their entire number for the game. If the "grand old man" of the diamond had only been helped along with a little stick-work on the part of his teammates, he would have stood an excellent chance to win, as he was in excellent form.

Boston Looked Good.

Boston looked good in the first inning. Selbach and Parent singled. Burkett hit to Isbell and Parent was forced, Isbell to Dundon. Collins hit to Isbell, who fumbled, and the Hub manager was safe. Stahl out, Isbell to Donohue, Selbach scoring. Freeman out, Donohue to White.

Neither side threatened the plate until the sixth, when the Sox tallied twice. Ferris fumbled and Dundon was safe. White moved him along with a sacrifice, Collins to Freeman. Green singled past third, but Dundon was held at third. Jones and Dundon attempted a squeeze play, but Jones failed to bunt, and Dundon was out at the plate. Jones walked, and Isbell doubled to left, scoring Green and Jones. Isbell reached third on a passed ball. Callahan went out, Parent to Freeman.

It looked like a score for Chicago in the eighth, when White opened up with a double. He took third on Green's out, Ferris to Freeman. On Jones's rap White was out at the plate, Freeman to Criger. Isbell out, Ferris to Freeman.

Tannehill Outpitched.

Ed Walsh, who was in the box in the second contest, outpitched Jesse Tannehill and won after ten innings of hard ball playing, 4 to 3.

As in the first contest, Boston was the first to score, making a tally in the fourth inning.

Collins doubled and was moved to third on Stahl's sacrifice, Walsh to Donohue. Freeman singled, scoring Collins. Freeman stole and Ferris flied to Callahan. Armbruster walked. Tannehill, safe on Dundon's wild throw, filling the bases. Selbach couldn't get the ball out of Callahan's hands.

Chicago made a run in the seventh. Callahan was hit by a pitched ball and went to third on Donohue's single. McFarland flied to Selbach, Callahan scoring. Donohue out, Tannehill to Freeman to Parent. Lee Tannehill flied to Selbach.

Boston took the lead again in its half of the eighth.

Stahl's Hit Scores Two.

Parent walked and stole second. Burkett was hit by a pitched ball and both men moved up a base on a passed ball. Collins out, Dundon to Donohue. Parent was held at third. Stahl singled to left, Parent and Burkett scoring. Stahl went to second on the throw in. Freeman walked and Ferris fanned. Armbruster forced Freeman, Dundon to Isbell.

Chicago Again Evened Score.

In their half of the eighth Chicago again evened up the score. Dundon and Walsh singled in order, and Green beat out a bunt. Jones and Isbell fanned in succession. Callahan singled, Dundon and Walsh scoring. Green out at the plate, Burkett, Parent to Armbruster.

Things went along smoothly to the tenth, when, after Boston's futile attempt to score, the White Sox won the game. Green singled, Jones fanned, but Green stole second and went to third on Armbruster's wild throw. Isbell flied to Stahl. Chick relayed the ball to Armbruster, who threw wild to Tannehill, who was covering the plate, Green scoring. The scores.

WASHINGTON WINS TWICE.

Special to the Sunday American.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 26.—Washington annexed the double-header from the Browns to-day. In the first game St. Louis was off to a good lead, but Glade let up in the seventh, allowing Stahl's men four runs and the game. Adams, Washington's Texas recruit, twirled in brilliant style, allowing nary a hit after the second inning until the ninth.

Falkenberg proved a big stumbling block to [illegible] and the second game went to Washington's credit. The lanky Stahlite was in rare form, and allowed but four scattered hits. Scores:

Julian Hawthorne Tells How Will Power Is Better for Exercise Than Gymnasium Apparatus

Julian Hawthorne.

PRINCE KUROPATKIN, the Russian Socialist, relates how his father, an army officer, had for years told a story of how he rescued some persons from a burning building. One day he told it to a person who had been present on the occasion. "But you didn't go into the building yourself, General?" suggested the auditor. "Not precisely in my own person," the hero admitted; "but I sent some of my servants—it is the same thing!" In the same way some of us get the idea that to attend a rowing regatta or a track event or a boxing match constitutes us athletes; but there really is a difference there.

We then noted that encouragement of athletics by universities was prompted in part by financial considerations, thus opening the way to professionalism, and vulgarizing the whole matter; for money is poison to athletics. Too much devotion to exercise ends by enfeebling the body and shortening life, instead of the contrary; and physical and nervous fatigue create a craving for artificial stimulants. Finally, in order to fix in our minds the true legitimate pupose of all exercise, the formula was given. "Resist Gravitation"; the downward drag of that elemental force being the cause of our strength, if fought against, just as it is the cause of our decay, if yielded to.

And now we are to consider the force which we are to oppose to this gravitational force, and thus turn the latter's hostility into our salvation. It is, after all, the greatest force in the world; it has made the savage planet fit for human habitation; it has created civilization and human character. And it is this force which can take a feeble, anemic, and unshapely human body, and sculpture it into the likeness of a Greek statue. What it is exactly we cannot be said to know; but we call it the human will. That is not a definition scientifically accurate. For example, one of the most frequent services of our will is to make us do things against our will; but without going into metaphysics it will answer for practical purposes. It is not only indispensable in all athletics, but it is their source and support; and when we say that exercise trains the will, we mean that we more and more habituate the will to prompt and control our physical movements. The more intimate, conscious, and constant this control, the more rapidly and fully will the body become developed.

This truth, by the way, furnishes one of the best arguments against depending for muscular training upon the apparatus of a gymnasium. It would be going altogether too far to affirm that gymnastic apparatus can be entirely dispensed with. But the point is, that by making exercise too easy it tempts us to take our minds from what we are doing—makes the exercise almost involuntary, in other words. You may be surprised to hear that lifting a two-hundred-pound dumbbell, for instance, may be easier than to perform the same movements without one. But bear in mind the situation. Here you stand on the gymnasium floor, and there at your feet is the dumbbell; after you have agreed with yourself to lift it above your head, your voluntary part in the transaction ceases. Up it goes, and the better your skill from practice the less brute exertion will you put into the act; instead of pushing it up by a violent and direct effort, as an unskilful man would do, you get under it, and then get away from it, and, finally, when your arm is straightened out, you erect your body. In short, your skill derived from practice, instead of leading you to put forth more strength, enables you to put forth less; and although, of course, the dumbbell strengthens you, it does not keep you up to your highest mark, as would the same movements made with no dumbbell in your hand. For, in the latter case, you would imagine the dumbbell to be there, and in imagining yourself thereupon to be lifting it, you would voluntarily nerve yourself thereupon to lift two hundred pounds. That this strain can be imposed by the will upon the muscles every gymnast knows. Now, as the imaginary dumbbell goes on its way upward, there can be no jockeying with it; no shirking hard work by skilled evasions, as in the case of the real weight; but at every stage and instant of the process your will is fixed upon the muscles involved, and is forcing them to do their best. And, after the work is done that tract of muscles will have received better development than if a real dumbell had been used. The imaginary weight was more effective for the end in view than the actual one.

The two hundred-pound-dumbbell is an extreme example; you can realize the truth better in the case of the chestweights. After you have learned the various movements you get, no doubt, a certain amount of exercise from the pulleys, and very useful exercise it is. But the movements are now mechanical, that is, you make them without, practically, being aware of it. Very rarely will you find a man fixing his conscious attention upon his movements; and they are therefore made, so far as possible, with slack muscles. The weights of themselves must, of course, bring a certain amount of strain upon the muscles; but other adjoining muscles, which should be employed, are left nearly idle. Very different would be the case if you were making the same movements without weights, that is, if your will were substituted for them. You would then be obliged to fix your conscious attention upon every movement you made; and every movement, and part of a movement, would consequently yield to your development its full value.

But to do all exercising of the gymnastic kind without apparatus is an ideal—a counsel of perfection—and is not to be insisted on in practice. I would advise no person unused to exercise to attempt it. Begin by training yourself in all the movements with the help of weights, and thus inform yourself where your muscles are, and how to use them. After that you will be able to substitute your will for the apparatus when you feel the need of more thorough work. I need hardly say, however, that there are gymnastic exercises which cannot be done without apparatus; such as the flying trapeze feats, for example. And whenever you wish to test your strength, apparatus must, of course, be used. It might, moreover, be objected that the earth he runs or walks on is apparatus for the athlete, or the bats and balls he plays with, or the opponents with whom he boxes or wrestles. But we are not going to be quite so severe as that in our definitions. And the fact remains that the finest sculptor of the muscles, the best invigorator of the organs, the most effective antagonist of gravitation is the human will. Athletics which do not strengthen the character as much as they do the muscles are not the best athletics; when you find weak places in an athlete's body you will find a corresponding feebleness in the moral and mental man. The old poet, Edmund Spenser, hit this truth in nobler words when he said: "For soul is form, and doth the body make." And the more you reflect upon it, and try by experience, the truer it will appear.

BRITT AND NELSON PUT IN HARD DAY'S TRAINING FOR THEIR FIGHT

Special to the Sunday American.

San Francisco, Aug. 26.—"Death Valley" Scott, the original "Coin of the Realm Kid," was the star visitor at the Britt camp out at the beach. Scotty dashed up to Sheehan's in a big automobile, accompanied by a party of friends.

James Edward had just emerged from the surf, and was being rubbed down. Manager Willus expressed his regrets to Scotty, and the millionaire was invited to call around to-morrow in time to see James go through his stunts. Scotty and Britt were introduced later, and according to Pitcher Kelly, who is Scotty's mentor, the millionaire will bet a big bundle of loose change on the champion.

Britt did not go on the road in the morning. His trainers are afraid of giving him too much work. In the afternoon, however, Jimmy put in a strenuous hour and a half in the gymnasium. He skipped the rope for twenty minutes and then put on the gloves with Frank Rafael.

Jimmy and his sparring partner boxed three fast rounds, during which it could be plainly seen that Britt was perfecting his hitting ability and leaving his natural speed to take care of itself. He took on Johnnie Frayne after for three rounds, but was careful, profiting by the experience of the day before.

Britt's New Wallop.

Britt has developed a dangerous right hand wallop that his sparring partners are afraid of. Tiv Kreling and Britt went through their combination hitting and shoving bout. Fifteen minutes at the wrist machine and pulling weights ended the day's indoor work. Then Britt and his trainers this afternoon swam in the breakers.

Battling Nelson put on the gloves for the first time since his return from his tour of the Eastern cities in six-round bouts. The day also witnessed the first practical use of the open air arena. "Bat's" lip was sufficiently healed to permit him to weather a tussle or two without drawing blood.

Nelson at Medicine Ball.

Bob Lundie essayed to join the Hegewisch champion in his labors. They begun with the medicine ball. The sun beat down upon their unprotected heads and the severity of its rays was unmitigated by the least semblance of a breeze.

In spite of these surroundings Nelson and his partner tossed the clumsy ball as fast as their arms could put it. The Dane was bubbling over with good spirits.

After a siege of the skipping rope the men put on the gloves. With both brimful of energy the bout proved an interesting one.

Favored Battling's Lip.

Fearing that Nelson's lip might by some accidental punch be cracked open again the men resorted to clinching and wrestling in the second and third rounds. After the boxing match Nelson went upstairs to the indoor gymnasium and terminated his labors by punching the bag. It is possible for the next two or three days Nelson will not cut such a rapid gait in his training. He realizes to the full there is such a thing as overtraining and becoming stale and he will try to strike that happy medium wherein lies strength and success.

TWO NEW PLAYERS FOR THE CHAMPS

Special to the Sunday American.

Chicago, Aug. 26.—Pitcher Hughes of the Davenport team, a brother of Long Tom Hughes, formerly of the Boston and now with Washington, has been signed by President John I. Taylor of the Bostons. He will pitch in one game of the double-header to-morrow.

Mr. Taylor has also secured Outfielder Clay of Louisville and he will join the team to-morrow for a trial.

LYNN, 8; WOONSOCKET, 1.

Lynn, Aug. 26.—The Lynn Association team put it all over the Woonsocket Comets at Ocean Park this afternoon, by a score of 8 to 1. Ira Newick, the Association team's crack twirler, held the visitors down to 2 hits. Score:

DORCHESTER WINS GAME AND SERIES

The Locals of Dorchester easily defeated the South Boston team on Dunbar avenue field yesterday afternoon by a score of 6 to 2, thereby winning the series by taking two out of three games played.

The South Boston boys were never dangerous for one minute, and the Locals just took things easy and fattened up their batting averages, Ross, Calkins, Hickey and J. Mahoney leading in this department.

The Mahoney brothers were in the points again for the locals and played their usual strong game. Hickey, the captain of the Dorchester boys, was in the game every minute of the time and had to his credit two clean singles, five put outs and seven assists.

Shannon, who played his first game for the locals, proved himself a great acquisition to the team and made a fine showing by scoring two of the six runs, and making two of the total of three hits.

The Locals have been strengthened by the addition of a number of the Dorchester players, which team has been consolidated with the Locals, and Manager Anderson of the Dorchester team being secured as playing manager of the new combination.

Beginning next Saturday on Dunbar avenue field, the Locals will play a series of five games with the fast Neponset team for a substantial purse, and great interest is being developed already as to the outcome. The score:

NARRAGANSETT MAY SEE RECORDS BROKEN.

Fine Meeting of the Grand Circuit Promised at the Famous Old Track—Audubon Boy and Others Go Against Time

Providence claims the grand circuit horses for a week, beginning to-morrow, and the "bike wheels" will whirl around the Narragansett Park track built by former Governor Sprague over forty years ago.

The grand circuit in all its years since its beginning never had to deal with such a list of interruptions and hard luck as has been handed to it this year.

The refusal of the State board to allow a meeting at Empire City track, N. Y., after the dates had been claimed, was the first break in a series of hardships. Poughkeepsie filled the broken link gap and gave good racing on the old three-in-five plan.

Body Blow at Cleveland.

It received a body blow when the Mayor of Cleveland proclaimed at the close of the meeting at Detroit that pool selling would not be allowed at the Glenville track. This act enforced a week's idleness on the followers of the circuit. The Buffalo meeting was a success, although the races were on the three-heat freak plan, the same as Detroit. Poughkeepsie had a good meeting, the racing being high-class. Bad weather for two days had an influence on the attendance which was not profitable.

Then came Readville, with the best arranged list of events ever made. Any horse in the country could race in some of its classes, so skilfully had they been planned. The "no pool-selling" blow so long averted fell with a sting. The great events which closed early in the year were raced off in two days, and the public never saw cleaner and finer contests.

Up to Narragansett.

It is now up to grand old Narragansett to give the "king pin" meeting of the year. The slower classes are on the ancient three-in-five plan. Some of the faster ones are to be decided on two-in-three issue, itself an old form and approved by expert horsemen and common sense people.

The meeting opens Monday and continues six days. The 2:08 pace is first on the card, with eight entries. Kruger, Ginger and Don Carr are the likely horses in the first call to the post.

Most of the horses at Readville got away Thursday morning. Sweet Marie and Tiverton, who have been at Readville all the week, were the first to bid adieu to the track at the foot of the Blue Hills. They have an engagement at Providence this week, and it was there the great rivalry between them began.

Audubon Boy Against Time.

Audubon Boy will start there again time, probably his record of 2:03¼, an will attempt to beat 2:01⅘, the time h paced in at Readville on Tuesday.

Sadie Mac, 2:06¼, is billed in th Roger Williams, which Sweet Marie w last year, the time being 2:06¼. If N man B. can make her come to a driv stake will have a new record.

Delaree, who won the Blue Hill, not start until Tuesday and will out- ber field. Ethel's Pride, who won th Ponkapoag, is scheduled for a start also and will have Sadie K., who was fourth to Delaree in the Blue Hill, for a competitor. Glenwood M. and Kid Shea, heat winners in different classes at Readville, come together in the 2:09 trot Thursday. Grace Keller also is in this class.

Fast Ones in the Park Brew.

Allison, Geary and Walter Direct, who fought out a six heat race in the Neponset stake, are named to start in the Park Brew Tuesday for a purse of $5,000.

The Friend is named in the 2:06 pace Friday. In the free-for-all pace Thursday are the names of Locanda, Nervolo, John M., Pan Michael, Belle Mc and Audubon Boy.

There is something doing all the time at Providence. The track is said to be very fast. The digging up it received for the runners stirred it up and put a cushion and a spring to it.

The closed classes have been arranged as follows:

MONDAY, AUGUST 28.

HUB NATIONALS WERE EASY PICKING.

"Schoolmaster" Sam Leever's Puzzling Assortment Was Altogether Too Much for the Bostons Yesterday Afternoon

PITTSBURG WON THE GAME HANDILY, 4 TO 0

In a game marked by some sensational and some stupid baseball playing the Boston Nationals went down to defeat in the final game of the Pittsburg series, 4 to 0. Boston owes its defeat chiefly to the wildness of Pitcher Chick Fraser, who issued seven passes.

Boston got five hits off "Schoolmaster" Leever, while the Pirates made the same number off Fraser, but they were timely. Moreover, one of their hits was a home run by Wagner, and another a two base hit by Ritchey.

Some clever plays were pulled off by the fielders of both teams. Cozy Dolan made a one-handed catch in right field off the bat of Wagner in the seventh that was remarkable.

The ball looked good for a two-bagger at least, as it was sailing for the right field fence. Dolan started for the sphere on the hot foot, and with his back to the plate, stuck out his bare hand and caught the leather just a fraction of an inch from the fence. He was given a rousing ovation when he came in at the end of the inning.

Batty's Great Stop.

Batty made a one-handed stab of a grounder, that looked good for a single, and he was given a generous hand for the play. Moran got two difficult fouldies near the third base bleachers that were the signal for vociferous applause from the "gallery." "Lefty" Wallace, the new Piratical acquisition from the Peninsular district garned two difficult flies in the right garden.

Fred Tenney put up a very stupid game on the first sack. He dropped one throw in a listless manner, and made a toss home in the ninth, with Fred Clarke anchored on the third station, with vague intentions of reaching home. The Boston captain threw the ball away over to the grand stand and the Pirate chief scored.

Delehanty and Cannell had mixups on fly balls in the outfield, much to the displeasure of the regulars. Batty and Lauterborn were the other Hub offenders in the field.

Wagner was a big favorite with the fans, and when he put the ball over the fence in the ninth, the fans roared with delight. Moreover, Hans did some clever work while on bases and when he stole third in the third inning, the bleacherites chuckled with glee.

Sam Leever had great command of the ball, and did not issue a pass, and his only miscue was to hit Pat Moran on the wrist.

Wallace Got Good Reception.

"Lefty" Wallace had a big delegation of friends from South Boston at the game, who cheered him at frequent intervals. Jimmy did not do much with the bat, except get two bases on balls. He was given a send-off at the end of the game, by his friends, who wished him success on the road.

Pittsburg made its first score in the third. Clarke walked and stole second. He went to third on Leach's out, and scored on Wagner's single. Wagner went to second on the throw in to get Clarke at the plate. He stole third. Howard walked and stole second, while Captain Tenney never made an effort to stop him. Brain grounded out.

Pittsburg made their second run in the sixth. Howard walked. Brain fanned. Delehanty dropped Ritchey's fly. Gibson walked. Leever grounded to Tenney and Howard scored. Wallace was out on a grounder.

The Pirates made things hum in their half of the ninth. Wallace walked. Clarke hit to Lauterborn, who tagged out Wallace, who tried to make third on the play. Leach grounded out, and Clarke went to third on the play. Tenney threw home, thinking that Clarke was going to try to score, but he threw wild, and the visitor registered. Howard fouled out. BARNEY OLDFIELD, THE AUTO KING, AT BAY STATE MEET.

Prominent Racing Man Will Be Star at Tournament of Bay State Automobile Association Labor Day—5 Races Carded

It is a significant fact that four-fifths of the accidents that have ocurred in automobile races have been due entirely to a lack of preparations of the horse tracks for such contests. Barney Oldfield's accidents were with two exceptions caused by dust clouds on the track. The recent accident to Kiser was on this account, and the accident to Webb Jay occurred while he was endeavoring to force his way through a dust cloud, and if possible overcome the advantage over him held by his competitors, who were within a few yards of him. These facts show far better than can all the arguments possible that the great danger to motor car racers is the dust evil, an evil which was apparent to the racing committee of the Bay State Automobile Association in the very early Spring, when it insisted upon having the Readville track oiled for its race meet. Had other race promoters adopted the same course in this respect there is no question but what three men, who are now nursing severe injuries, would be enjoying the best of health.

The preparation of a horse track for motor racing is fully as important as is the securing of racing talent, but unfortunately the average promoters overlook this important point, the result being that the men are called upon to take desperate chances of life and limb in order to win some of the prizes. This has been the case all over the circuit, the result being that many of the owners of racing cars and operators have taken a definite stand that they will not compete on the track which is not properly oiled.

Hub Ahead on Tracks.

That Boston and her Bay State Association was several months ahead of all others is evident from her action of the first of the year, and also by the fact that in securing the track for the coming meet she insisted upon the privilege of oiling the same.

While several men have retired from racing, there are a sufficient number left to make the coming meet a great success. Barney Oldfield, the daring, the reckless and the most talked of man in the automobile game, is not afraid to take a chance on the Readville track when it is oiled, and he will be here to compete in the opens and also to ride five miles against the world's record.

2 AUTO RACES WON BY WOMAN DRIVER.

Two World's Records and a Narrow Escape Mark Contests at Cape May—Campbell Runs Auto Into the Ocean

Special to the Sunday American.

Cape May, N. J., Aug. 26.—Two world's records, two victories by a woman driver, and a narrow escape from a bad accident marked the Autumn auto races on the beach here to-day under the auspices of the Cape May Auto Club.

After making a mile with the eighty-horse power Darracq, fitted with Michelin tires, in thirty-eight seconds, the fastest of the meeting, which gave him the $1,000 Cape May trophy, A. L. Campbell, the driver for S. B. Stevens, ran out into the ocean trying to pass Louis Chevrolet in their race. The car slewed around, throwing up a heavy spray that blinded the driver and it toppled over on the two left wheels.

Campbell's Narrow Squak.

A shudder ran through the thousands on the board walk. Campbell quickly shut off the power and applied the brakes, which brought the car to a stop. The water had short circuited all the battery connections, however, and the car was laid up for the day.

The race between Campbell, with the Darracq, and Chevrolet with the new 120-horse power Fiat that finished third in the Gordon Bennett cup race driven by Nazzari, was the feature of the meet. From a standing start the pair went skimming round the surf-edged course. Nearing the finish, Campbell tried to get by Chevrolet on the waterside and went in too deep. Chevrolet's time was 51 4-5 seconds, a new world's record for a standing start mile in competition.

Record for Medium Cars.

C. E. Drino with the Fiat, Jr., covered a mile in 51 3-5 seconds, a record for middle-weight cars.

Mrs. Clarence C. Fitler's car took first honors in two races with her 28 horse power Packard.

Henry Ford's car was a disappointment. Christie's car was not in good shape on account of a repaired pump connection. It must be said, however, that the beach is at least 4 seconds slower to the mile than the course at Ormond, so times made equal some of the best on record.

The Summary.

W. W. COE WINS TWICE IN THE NEW ENGLAND CHAMPIONSHIP GAMES

Strong limbed athletes, the best in New England, met in the annual track championships at Combination Park yesterday and in the most vigorous and inspiring contests of the year won title and glory in tests of physical speed on the track and muscular skill in the field events.

It was the finest group of fleet footed athletes that has appeared at any meeting this Summer and every one of the thirteen events on the card brought out brilliant performances, as the competitors were primed to acquit themselves to the highest notch of their ability, and with the championship medals luring them on to greater effort, the 2,000 spectators saw some grand athletic feats.

The prominent men in the track world did credit to themselves and lived up to their reputations and very few things went wrong.

W. W. Coe, the world's champion shot putter, won two events, putting the 16 and 56 pound shot, and shared the honors with Walter Hubbard, the Amherst captain, who also won two medals, one in the hurdles when he beat out Ellery Clark, who used to stand foremost in the same, and as was expected he had an easy thing in the broad jump.

Coe in Class by Himself.

Coe was in a class by himself in the weight events and his best put in the 16 pound shot of 46 feet 11 inches was way beyond the reach of any individual arrayed against him. He made this put on his first trial in the final round. He did equally well in throwing the heavier weight and was many feet ahead of his nearest competitor, who was Ellery Clark.

W. D. Eaton, in the hundred yards dash and Harry Gidney of Malden in the high jump, past champions, won their events without much trouble, while some of the old timers like Dick Grant, Bart Sullivan and Ellery Clark found the new material too tough for them.

The two-mile steeplechase, a novel event for this section of the sporting world, proved an amusing race, in which Martin Greene of Norwood, the Irish harrier, was the whole thing, as he had run over the barriers over on the other side of the water.

There were ditches, hedges and an eighteen foot Liverpool water jump in the course, which was inside the circular track and the hurdlers and runners had a hard journey before the race was over.

The Liverpool caused the downfall of most of the men, who splashed into the three feet of water and crawled out to continue on their way.

Greene did not mind the going, and always kept a safe distance in front of his field, and on the run to the tape he stopped and waved his hand for them to come. Robert Bowie of Boston ran in second place for most of the distance, but he was pressed by Allen Brown of Dartmouth, who went into second place on the last mile.

Eaton Won Short Dash.

W. D. Eaton won the short dash, but did not have much to spare on Resigari, the Tufts sprinter, at the finish. The latter was in the lead at fifty yards, but Eaton had the stronger finishing powers and won by a foot. There were only four to start and Ford of Harvard and the St. Joseph's was third, while Jordan of Dartmouth ran fourth, a yard behind the leaders.

The time, 10 2-5, was nothing remarkable for a championship event, and Eaton has repeatedly done better.

With Bart Sullivan of Cambridge in the half-mile it looked like a sure thing for him, but Frank Sheehan of South Boston, the Yale interscholastic champ, surprised the talent and made Sullivan, who was out of condition, stop running in sight of the finish. It was a thrilling windup in which Sheehan showed a great burst of speed. Farrel of the St. Josephs ran strongly and came fast at the end for second.

Another fine finish came in the three mile event, which had Dick Grant in, but he had to quit at the end of the second mile.

Lee, the little runner from the Cambridgeport Gym, and Hearer of the St. Alphonsus A. A. had a bruising race to the wire, in which the latter survived.

Clark Loses Hurdles.

In the high hurdles, Ellery Clark made a game struggle, but he was obliged to bow to Hubbard and Haynes, the old Tech runner.

Clark knocked down one of the last hurdles, which caused him to lose his stride and he was put back a yard for going over his mark at the start, which lessened his chances. Hubbard took the flights in the best of form and was never headed.

Resigari of Tufts, who ran second in the short dash, was never bothered in the furlong dash. Eaton did not run, which made it easier for the Tufts runner.

Tipple of Providence, who has been showing well in the open meets, sprang a surprise in the mile run, and his race to the wire with little Tommy Reardon of the Cambridge Gym was one of the sensations of the day.

100 yard dash—Won by W. D. Eaton, Cambridgeport Gym.; second, H. G. Resigari, Tufts; third, F. J. W. Ford, St. Joseph's A. A. Time, 10 2-5s.

NILES TRIUMPHS IN INTERSCHOLASTIC TENNIS MATCH.

Volkman Player for the Third Time Gains the Honor of School Champion in the Big Tourney Now on at Newport

Newport, Aug. 26.—In the national lawn tennis championship tourney being held on the Newport Casino courts the field was cut down to eight. For the first time matches of general interest were decided. W. A. Larned's meeting with R. D. Little and W. J. Clothier's match with F. H. Waidner were the contests which caused the most excitement.

N. W. Niles of the Volkman school for the third time earned the title of Interscholastic champion by winning in straight sets from W. R. Johnson of Princeton.

A large Saturday crowd turned out to see the sport. The day was clear, and just warm enough to suit the majority of the contestants. Because of the previous night's rain, the courts were rather heavy, but Tom Pettit and his force of groundsmen, by a liberal use of the steam roller, got most of the moisture out of the ground.

The Larned-Little match was given the place of pride on the day's programme, and the chance expected at Longwood for a division between the two was secured to-day. At Longwood Little's unfortunate slump in the final round, when he met Hackett, prevented immediate decision, but [illegible] the fortune of a draw [illegible] together [illegible] The match [illegible] of being a real test [illegible] well worth its place on the grand stand [illegible].

The Clothier-Waidner match did not promise so [illegible] for Clothier was [illegible] picked as a winner, but that the Westerner would give him good and sufficient battle, with every promise of pretty play, was the indication.

Larned won his first set over Little, 6 to 0, the second 6 to 1, lost the third, 8 to 6, and won the fourth, 7 to 5.

Though the feeling was strong that Clothier was to dispose of Waidner, the match developed into a splendid struggle, and Clothier had his work cut out for him, being obliged to go the full five sets to get the win. Waidner had him two sets to love, 9-7 and 6-4, and it looked for a long time as though he were on the way to perpetrate the first upset of the tourney [illegible]. He did not bring it off, however, and the third, fourth, and fifth went to Clothier, 6-2, 6-4, 6-4.

Jim Britt Trains on Classic Reading

BY TAD.

James E. Britt has commenced active training for his fight with Battling Nelson, and the first thing carted out to Sheehan's resort on the Ocean Beach was a morocco-bound set of Shakespeare's works. Let it be understood right here that James is the studious kid, and nothing that Bill Shakespeare ever let loose from that right hook of his has escaped the lamps of the Frisco mitt man. He has literature for breakfast, dinner and supper, and Spider Kelly is thinking of pasting a few pages on the punching bag that James may read as he works. Ah me, what are these fighters coming to!

Well, that side bet of $10,000 still looks good to me. Yesterday both Willus Britt and Billy Nolan placed $2,500 apiece as their first installment of the bet. The other $7,500 goes up the day before the fight. Harry Corbett has the [illegible] stuck away in his iron box and he says it looks just like the other yellow stuff that he has handled.

Work Begun on Arena.

Jimmy Coffroth has started to build the open air arena at Union Coursing Park and had a flock of shovel wielders out there yesterday playing "chuck the dirt." He expects to have the whole business up and ready to play in within two weeks and the event [illegible] will be ready.

There has not been much said concerning the [illegible] September 9 [illegible] one of the biggest [illegible] On that date fifty-five years ago California was admitted into the Union as a State, and ever since then the men from California [illegible] a gala day [illegible] present [illegible] day at [illegible] $5,000 [illegible] Jimmy Coffroth holds his [illegible] day that there will be a shyness of males at their pow wow.

They have asked Coffroth to change the date of the fight and there is a [illegible] boycott [illegible] if the date is not changed. Coffroth will see them some time this week and give his final answer. There is little chance that the date will be changed, however, as September 9 will come on a Saturday this [illegible] and no better date could have been selected for the fight, as this gives the sports from outside towns plenty of time to come to the city, see the fight, and return home in time for the time-clock in the office on Monday morning.

Train in Open Air.

Both Britt and Nelson are having ring and punching bag stands built out in the open for their training. This is to get them accustomed to the open air for the [illegible] work the [illegible] the sun beats [illegible] there and [illegible] in the aft[illegible]

[illegible] have the better of this, as he is away from the ocean [illegible] here [illegible] sharp at times [illegible] protected by trees.

Everything is going along nicely, boys, [illegible] about the time that we will hear of Britt spraining his ankle or Nelson overweight. Lean back now and watch the calendar. September 9 will be here before you know it.

Spirited Racing at Dorchester Matinee

Members of the Dorchester Driving Club were scattered far and wide yesterday. Some of the blue ribbon horses were at the athletic meet in Medford and a lot of the old timers were at the Marshfield Fair, where they were in competition with the good things from the Dreamwold Farm. Only a small array of horses were left at home to keep the sport going on Franklin Field.

The racing was the best that a matinee can furnish. Close finishes marked the driving in every heat. The crowd in attendance was larger than ever.

Special to the Sunday American.

Lynn, Aug. 26.—The Pioneers won the championship by shutting out the Colonials this afternoon in the [illegible] series at Ocean Park, by a score of 6 to 0. It is intended to have big mass meetings, parades and entertainments.

HAVERHILL WINS TWICE; SO DOES FALL RIVER

Taunton Has No Chance with Leaders and Nashua is Easy For Opponents.

Haverhill, Mass., Aug. 26.—Haverhill took both games from Nashua at Athletic Park this afternoon. In the first the locals allowed the visitors only one run in the sixth inning. McGinley had 12 strike outs and the all round playing was a fine feature.

The locals took the second game, holding Nashua down to a single [illegible] they scored two runs. [illegible] Steventon hard and it was only slow fielding which allowed the visitors to score at all. Scores:

SIX POUNDS OF MUSHROOMS EVERY MORNING THAT PAYS!

Jos. T. McCormick, proprietor of the Willmore, Windber, Penn., writes, July 22: "The spawn I bought from you is surely fine. I cut six pounds nearly every morning. I had one that weighed almost 9 ounces. Am pleased very much for my first attempt. I am going to put down four or five more beds. I could sell all I have if I cared to, but I use them myself."

Figure it up for yourself: Six pounds per day from one little bed (the spawn for which costs you $2) at 50c. per pound (many hotels gladly pay as much as 75c. per pound) means $3.00 per day. Suppose he (or say YOU) had five small beds (and the five could be cared for almost as easily as one) and had no larger yield. The income for the few minutes he would need to work on these mushroom beds would be $15.00 A DAY—$90.00 a week—$4,680.00 a year. Many men and women are making splendid incomes growing Mushrooms—and the demand for Mushrooms is growing larger every day. Your cellar, stable or old woodshed would make an ideal place for a Mushroom bed. Send for a free copy of our Illustrated Mushroom Booklet, Instructions for Growing, Copy of Full Page Article from St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Extracts from U. S. Government Reports and 1905 Fall Catalogue of Bulbs, Seeds, etc.

MILL GIRL SUES FOR HUSBAND, AGED 80.

He Was to Settle $50,000 on Her at Wedding, but Two Hours Before Ceremony He Was Arrested by Relatives

SHE THEN APPLIES FOR HABEAS CORPUS

Maid, 24, Puts Up Hard Fight to Take Guardianship from Wealthy Groom-to-Be That Nuptials May Be Observed

Bennington, Vt., Aug. 26.—Comely Miss Jennie Bissell, the twenty-four-year-old mill girl who is trying to have Columbus Huling of North Bennington, her eighty-year-old and wealthy [illegible] freed from what she declares [illegible] rest out of his liberty, is anxiously awaiting the decision of Judge Munson of the Superior Court, on her habeas corpus appeal taken in his behalf.

It is understood that Huling promised to settle $50,000 on her the day of their wedding. Miss Bissell's friends declare that the two are really in love with each other, and that mercenary motives are not influencing the young woman.

Two hours before the time set for the wedding relatives of Huling intervened, and the result was the appointment of a guardian for him. Then Miss Bissell, who has considerable determination, secured a writ of habeas corpus and a hearing took place. Judge Munson reserved his decision, which is expected to be given out next week.

Columbus Huling is the last of an old and wealthy family. He is said to be worth $150,000. He has lost his wife and only son and has had a housekeeper of late.

When Did He Court?

Two years ago Miss Bissell came to North Bennington from Shushan, N. Y., and went to work in a hosiery mill where her sister is forewoman. She boarded for a year and a half next door to Huling. Six months ago she moved to another part of the town. So far as anyone knew she was not even friendly with Huling. They were never seen in public together.

Much surprise was caused, then, about ten days ago when Huling announced they were to be married. The general question was:

"When and where did Huling see her and do his courting?"

Two hours before the wedding time Huling's relatives [illegible] on charges of [illegible] breach of the peace. He was hustled over [illegible] peace charge was dropped [illegible] was appointed Huling's guardian [illegible] he was incapable of attending to his own affairs.

Hall named Frank Hollister as caretaker for Huling, who was closely watched. Then Huling sent for Attorney T. W. Maloney of Rutland. It is said that news of this got out and Mr. Maloney received a telegram, purporting to come from Huling, [illegible] the call to Maloney. But Maloney suspected that this was not done by Huling, [illegible]

Asks Habeas Corpus.

He previously sent word to Huling to meet him at Batchelder & Bates's office. Huling went there but encountered his guardian and the latter's lawyer at the foot of the stairway. There was a controversy and Huling did not see Maloney. [illegible] with his guardian and a deputy sheriff near by.

Then Miss Bissell took matters in her own hands. She completely surprised the guardian, the caretaker and the deputy by applying to the superior court for a habeas [illegible] show why Huling was [illegible] his liberty [illegible] came over from Shushan. After the arguments Judge Munson reserved decision.

AGED BARD SENDS WEDDING NOTE TO LYNN FOLKS.

Lynn, Aug. 26.—The home-coming of John Hutchinson, the aged bard of High Rock, with his bride to-morrow is awaited here with interest. Especially do people wonder if [illegible] daughter, Mrs. Viola Campbell, will carry out her reported determination to try to have the marriage annulled. Mr. Hutchinson and his bride, formerly Mrs. Agnes F. Everest of Washington, to whom he proposed twice before she accepted him, are now in Portsmouth. Richard P. Hutchinson [illegible] private secretary to [illegible] received a letter to-day [illegible] and his bride would arrive [illegible]

BOY SHOPLIFTERS RAISE A RUMPUS

Providence, R. I., Aug. 26.—Two young boys who were accused of shoplifting in a large department store created excitement during which several women fainted this afternoon. to win. I know the expenses on the Democratic side would be great, but I don't care so much for that.

"I know it would be displeasing to my family.

"Considering all objections, I say, if I should change my mind, it would only be through an overwhelming sense of public duty.

"If the business interests should succeed in making it clear to me that the cause of reciprocity and tariff revision would suffer by my refusal to run again, if the business interests should make it clear to me that only through my election again on the Democratic ticket would the Republican Congress be brought to a realizing sense that the people demand remedial tariff legislation, I cannot say that such propositions would not strongly impel me to change my mind.

"If the cause of industrial schools, which is dear to me, could be advanced by my re-election, that would be a very strong reason for a change of mind. Industrial schools interest all families. They are bound to come.

"The State must give boys the opportunity for the very best textile education. Some labor leaders do not see this as I do, but I believe in time they would. If I should run I know they would be with me, despite any little difference on that point. If I should run again I would talk this industrial school question as I feel it.

"Finally, if I could believe the majority of the people thought it would be better for the State that I should serve next year as Governor, rather than the candidate of the other party, that might impel me to change my mind.

"These are the important considerations that would influence me if I should change my mind. But I have not said, and no one has a right to say, that a change of mind on my part is probable."

"If the convention should nominate you without positive assurance that you would run—and that is being talked—what would you do?" I asked Governor Douglas.

"That would look bad for the party, would it not?" he inquired.

"It might be excused on the ground that it was intended as a compliment to you, in the event of your final refusal. But would you, in that emergency, persist in your refusal, Governor?"

"Oh, I do not believe the convention would do that and take chances," was the Governor's only reply.

SLAYER OF PRIVATE DETECTIVE IS DISCHARGED.

Those are the chief points in the decision of Judge Butler of the Somerville district court who yesterday discharged Joseph Evans, who had been on preliminary trial for the murder of George L. Fraser, a private detective, who was shot while entering the Evans home at 11 o'clock on the night of August 1 in company with Adon J. Barber, who was in search of evidence upon which to base a suit for divorce against his wife.

The preliminary trial of Evans lasted more than a week and was one of the longest hearings of the kind ever held in this State. The government's case was conducted by Police Captain Perry, while Martin Witte and John O'Neil represented the prisoner.

Mrs. Barber Not in Court.

Captain Perry was confident that Evans would be held for the grand jury and Evans's lawyers were of that opinion, too, when the case closed and Judge Butler took the evidence under consideration. The result was a surprise to everybody connected with the case, including Evans himself, who believed that he would ultimately receive his freedom, but not in the lower court.

When Judge Butler ordered the discharge of the prisoner yesterday Evans smiled and nodded his thanks. [illegible] shook hands with his lawyers. Mrs. Gertrude C. Barber, the woman in the case who was indirectly the cause of the shooting, was not in court when Barber was [illegible] Evans went to his home at No. 31 Moore street, West Somerville, where the shooting occurred, after which he issued a statement in which he declared that he never felt conscious that he was guilty of the death of Fraser.

[illegible] Judge Butler said in part:

Guilt Does Not Appear.

"As I understand the law, the duties of this court are not perfunctory. It is the duty of the court to carefully weigh the evidence. To hold the defendant for the Grand Jury it must be made to appear to me that this defendant is guilty. 'Probable cause' is not sufficient to hold him on the charge of murder. If it does not appear to me that he is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt he is entitled to be discharged.

"On the night of August 1 the defendant was in his own home, where he had a right to be without molestation unless by duly authorized officers armed with a proper warrant. Evans is a laboring man, and he retired early on that night. He was suddenly aroused from his slumber by a [illegible] of the front door bell.

"At the door he found four men, three private detectives and Mr. Barber, the husband of Mrs. Barber, who was a member [illegible] One of the number had rung the bell. It may not be important to consider to any great extent the reason why these men were there. The government was at first inclined to think that the case should rest upon the facts [illegible] that evening. Possibly [illegible] be necessary to wander far from [illegible]

Were Not Officers of the Law.

Mr. Barber had been notified by the defendant not to enter his house. This was a standing notice and given in writing. He had no right to either break into or in any other manner enter the defendant's house unless invited so to do by Evans. No one of the party were officers of the law, and they were there without a legal process to serve.

[illegible] of course [illegible] private detectives had [illegible] house without such invitation [illegible] that he knew that he had no [illegible] to enter the house without an invitation; that he did not know the detective who did enter, was going in, and he [illegible] approved of any [illegible] of [illegible] party forcing their way into the house.

"The evidence goes to show that when the door was opened by Evans, Fraser had his right foot on the doorstep about one foot from the defendant. All the witnesses agree that the door was pushed back [illegible] the defendant put out his [illegible] hand as if to prevent anybody entering, and that the deceased entered the open space almost simultaneously with the opening of the door. From the fact that the door swung back quickly it must be concluded that the entrance was rapid.

Engaged in a Struggle.

"At once the struggle between the defendant and the deceased commenced and continued down the entry way into the kitchen. The defendant is a man weighing 136 pounds, about 5 feet 8 inches tall and small of limb. The deceased was a stout, athletic man about the same height, with strong muscular limbs and weighing between 165 and 175 pounds. I think that it was in the mind of the deceased that he got to enter the house if the door was opened.

"The evidence shows that the defendant after the door was opened, tried to prevent Fraser from entering by placing his hands across the opening. Notwithstanding this fact Fraser made his way into the house by force. I cannot see any difference between an entrance gained in this manner and one secured by breaking through the door.

Was Taken by Surprise.

"Now there is no question but what Evans was taken by surprise. The government claims that Evans thought he was dealing with Barber. Admitting this to be true, which does not appear to be reasonable, there would have been more reason for the defendant to think his life in danger. Evans had a perfect right to tell Barber he did not want him in his house. The letter of Evans to Barber to my mind did not show any great animus on the part of the defendant, who offered to meet the husband for the purpose of aiding him in effecting a reconciliation between him and his wife.

"I do not think the prisoner premeditated the killing of this man. I have thought of the responsibility resting upon the court, and I have followed the evidence very closely. I realize that a man has been killed and the duty of the government to prosecute. I have also in mind the rights of the prisoner. In view of all the evidence I cannot see where I can hold him, and consequently order him discharged."

The trial of Evans attracted unusual attention and a very large attendance because of the novel questions of law that were raised. The two interesting women connected with the case were Mrs. Gertrude C. Barber and Mrs. Rebecca Evans, an aged woman, who up to a few months ago was the wife of the prisoner but was divorced.

Was Evans's Housekeeper.

The trial disclosed that Mrs. Barber left her husband more than a year ago and became the housekeeper for Evans. Barber, who is a fine-looking man, and who resides at Woonsocket, R. I., tried to get his wife back, but she refused to live with him. After a visit to Evans's house to see his wife Evans wrote to Barber that if he ever caught him in his house again he would kick him downstairs. It was then that Barber hired detectives to accompany him to the home of Evans.

Fraser, two other private detectives and some Somerville policemen accompanied Barber to the house. The shooting followed.

At the trial Mrs. Barber took the stand for the defence and her story went to confirm the contention of the prisoner's counsel that Fraser forced his way into the house and that Evans was justified in shooting him if he did so, which the defence did not admit.

Barber says that he will soon institute divorce proceedings against his wife. She has with her at present her eighteen months-old baby, while Barber has a five year-old child in his possession.

Evans Says He Felt No Guilt

Of course, I need hardly say that I am gratified at the fortunate outcome of the hearing.

The result is largely due, as I see it, to the untiring zeal and application of my counsel, Martin Witte and John H. O'Neill.

I have no hesitation in saying that at no time since the unfortunate affair at my house, No. 31 Moore street, did I have any fear that may be attributed to conscious guilt, and, while I regret exceedingly the deplorable death of Mr. Fraser, I feel that the evidence and the exhaustive summary of His Honor Judge Butler are my strongest recommendations for the future good will and respect of the public.

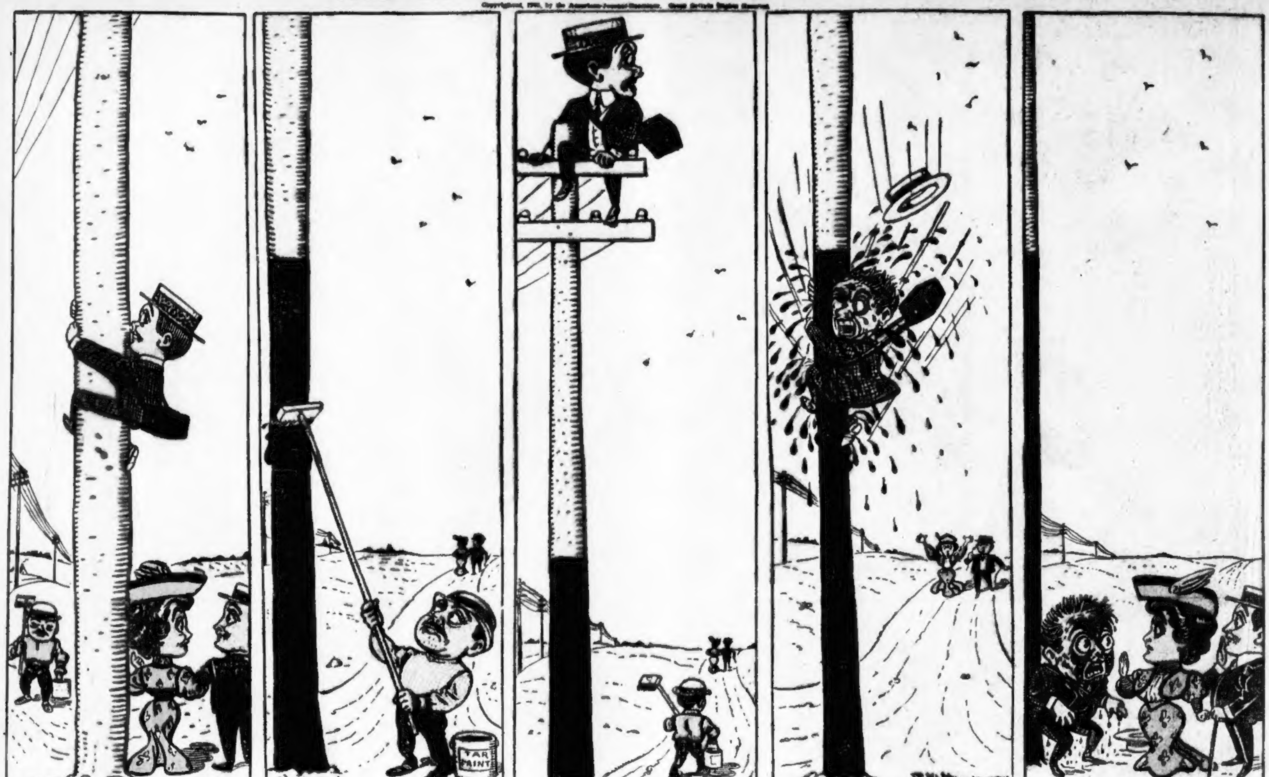
THE LOVE OF LULU AND LEANDER

Copyrighted, [illegible], by the American-Journal-Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.



1. LEANDER: "Say! Don't be afraid, Lulu; I'm a regular Steeple Jack. I'll take some snap-shots from the top of this pole that will simply astound you."
LULU: "Well, if he insists on risking his neck I'm not going to stay here and watch him. Come, let us take a walk up the road, Charley."

2. THE PAINTER: "This tar paint is thick and hard to work, but it does save these telegraph poles a heap of wear and tear."

3. LEANDER: "Ye gods! Just look where that pair have gone. Walking down the road almost arm in arm. Any one would think them lovers. Is it any wonder I'm jealous? I'll slide down this pole in a jiffy and put an end to that."

4. LEANDER: "Ha, here they turn back. What are they gesticulating about, I wonder? I'm going to give Lulu a piece of my mind this time, you bet. I'm getting—— Heavens! What have I struck?"

5. LULU: "Now, don't you say one word! It was all your own fault. Now, you start on home. When you get a couple of miles ahead of us we'll follow. I've lost all patience with you."

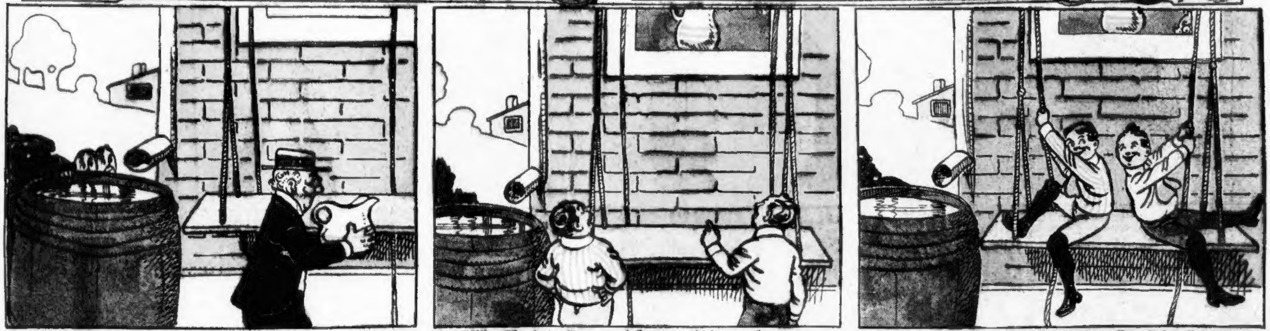
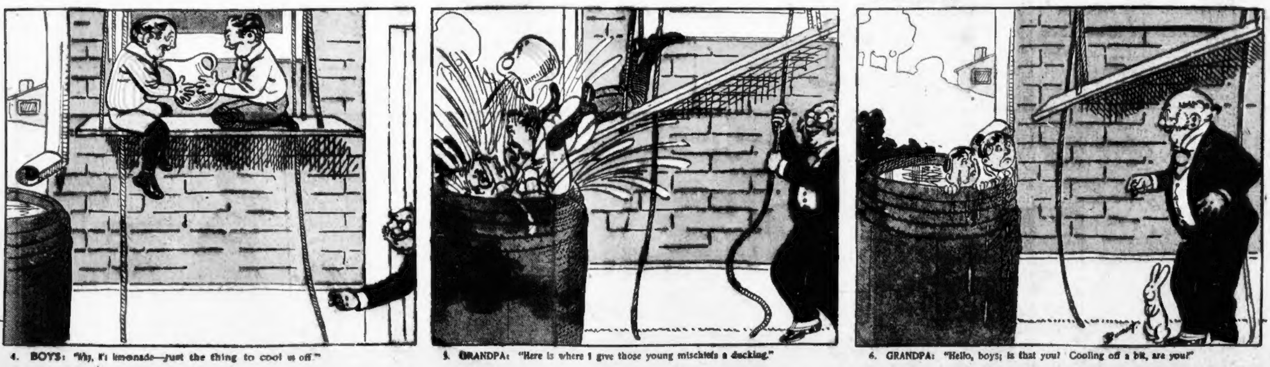
THE BOYS GET POSSESSION OF GRANDPA'S LEMONADE, BUT—ALAS! THEY IMMEDIATELY SPILL IT



1. BOYS: "Hello! Wonder what Gran'pa has in that pitcher?"

2. BOYS: "Why, look! There it is. Let's go up and take a peep."

3. BOYS: "This painters' scaffold is convenient. Now, both pull together. We will soon be up."



4. BOYS: "Why, it's lemonade—just the thing to cool us off."

5. GRANDPA: "Here is where I give those young mischiefs a ducking."

6. GRANDPA: "Hello, boys; is that you? Cooling off a bit, are you?"
